

MIGHT-HAWK KIT.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, 98 WILLIAM STREET NEW YORK.

Am. News Co., 119 & 123 Nassan 3t...

Moted Author to the Front.

forthcoming issue of "THE STANDARD FAVORITES,"

Beadle's Dime Novels, No. 239,

-published Tuesday, September 26th, 1871-introduces to its multitude of eager readers, the noted Hunter-Author,

CAPT. J. F. C. ADAMS,

Nephew of the famous "Old Grizzly Adams," in a romance fairly redolent of the woods and wild haunts of the untamed red-man, viz:

OLD ZIP;

THE AIR CABIN

BY "BRUIN" ADAMS,"

AUTHOR OF "THE PHANTOM PRINCESS;" "OLD GRIZZLY, THE BEAR-TAMER," ETC., ETC.

Living on the "verge of civilization" a settler suddenly found himself encompassed by the flerce Sioux, who, rising in one of their periodic "outbreaks," came down on the Minnesota settlements (1862) to perpetrate awful atrocities.

Old Zip Smith, the noted trailer, hunter and Indian hater, having passed through several of such "uprisings," was not caught unawares. and the stealthy tread of the savage found a stealthier foe on their track!

Old Zip was one of those true Knights of the Wilderness who have made our border history memorable-brave, simple-hearted, wise in the lore of the woods; a child in affection to his friends, a whirlwind of terror to his foes.

As a foil to such a character we have a Philadelphia exquisite, who, coming on to visit his uncle, the settler, to have a "jolly hunt and all that, you know," is caught in the toils, and passed through an ordeal that did not enhance his enthusiasm for the "country."

The settler's fair daughter, and the young hunter, Ned Hosmer, also come in for their share of the danger and the triumph--in all of which that remarkable Cabin in the Air acts well its part.

This novel, by this most admirable writer, will be especially welcome to firesides and homes, with whom "young Bruin" is indeed a great favorite.

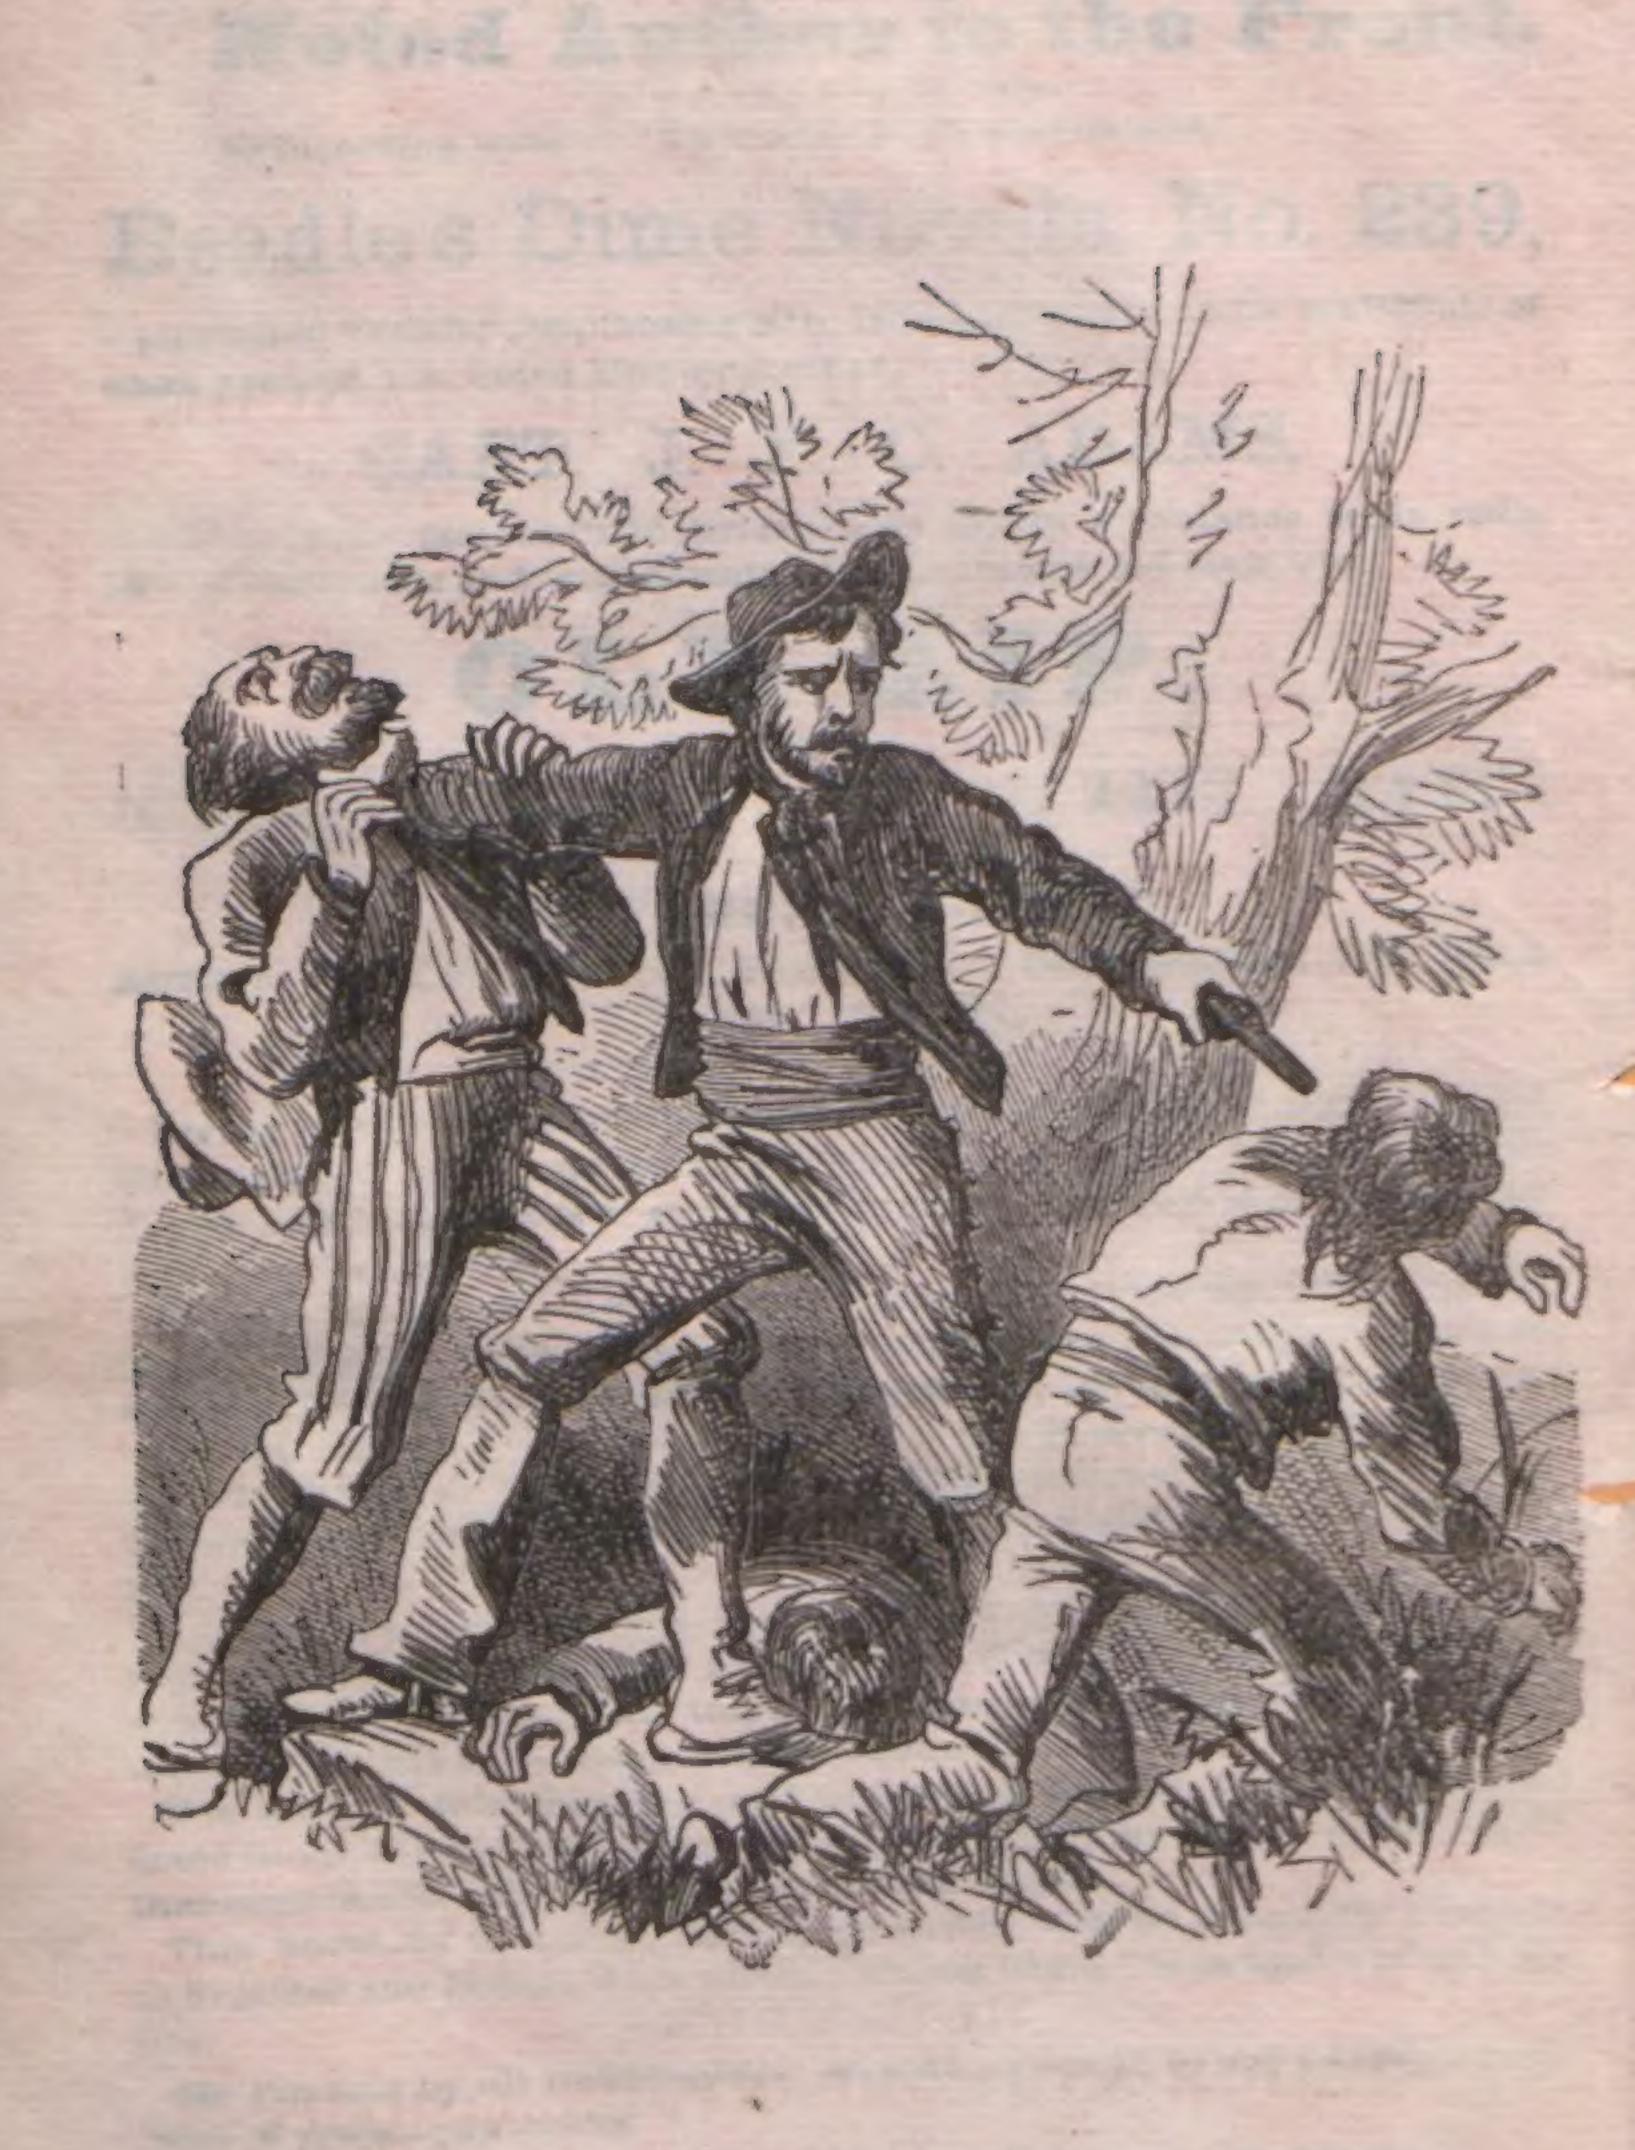

For sale by all newsdealers; or sent, post-paid, to any address on reeipt of price-TEN CENTS.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, Publishers, 98 William Street, New York.

FIGURETH WEITE

THE APPEAR AND A DESCRIPTION OF PRINTING,

NIGHT-HAWK KIT;

OR,

THE DAUGHTER OF THE RANCHE.

A ROMANCE OF THE SOUTH-WEST.

to the office of the Coleman and Coleman as Watter

Entered accombing to the Comment of the section Borning

THE RESERVE TO SHARE THE PARTY OF THE PARTY

BY JOS. E. BADGER, JR., Author of the following Dime Novels:

203. THE MASKED GUIDE,

218. THE INDIAN SPY,

210. REDLAW, HALF-BREED,

222. THE MAD RANGER,

213. SQUATTER DICK,

227. FOREST PRINCESS.

231. THE PARTISAN SPY.

NEW YORK:

the second of th

BEADLE AND COMPANY, PUBLISHERS, 98 WILLIAM STREET.

MICHIPLE WE KIT:

1

A ROLLINGERON TENNERS

TO THE WILL STREET

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1871, by BEADLE AND COMPANY,
In the office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

(No. 238.)

STREET SOL FOR

BELADLE AND COMPANY, PUBLISHERS,

5/1/38 MIGHT-MANAGEM

lalameed across the saddle before blurawasm shortly delityoldersolung bus own

vere an admixture, of the ranger and manchers type, pictur-

NIGHT-HAWK KIT.

CHAPTER T.

The horse he bestrode was exidently a middenty but yet of

THE BROKE SHEET IN CAPTAIN KIT."

THE sun had not long crossed the meridian, on a warm sultry day in midsummer, something less than two decades previous to the present day.

It is to a slightly rolling "timber-prairie" that we ask the reader's attention. This prairie extended for some distance along one of the confluents of the river Brazos, and was covcred with a dense growth of flowers and tall grasses, though scattered in irregular patches.

One passing down the stream, with it upon his right hand could distinguish before him an abrupt range of hills, rough and precipitous, at apparently four or five miles distance They looked dark and forbidding, being thickly covered with evergreens and parasite plants.

From behind one of these "timber-islands" or mottes alluded to, rode a single horseman, with front toward the hills. Both the steed and equestrian were such as would have called forth more than a passing glance, although both bore traces of long and arduous travel.

The young man-for he did not seem to have numbered more than five or six and twenty years of age-was of an uncommonly symmetrical build; tall and athletic, with limbs that, yet in proportion, were seemingly possessed of more than common strength and activity.

His hair was worn long and slightly curling, his eyebrows were black and heavy as twin arcs of velvet, arching his brows, beneath which burned a pair of richly-tinted hazel eyes, large, full and expressive. His complexion was a rich glowing brown, and a heavy mustache and beard covered the lower portion of his face.

A slouched felt hat rested upon his head, and his garments were an admixture of the ranger and ranchero type, picturesque and comfortable.

Balanced across the saddle before him was a short, richlyornamented rifle of heavy caliber, and from the belt at his waist peeped the silver-mounted butts of a knife and brace of revolvers.

The horse he bestrode was evidently a mustang, but yet of unusual size and beauty. Naturally a deep glowing chestnut, his smooth coat was now darkened, by sweat and dust, to an almost blackness. A small "blaze" in the forehead, and one white stocking, were all the distinguishing marks about him.

"Come, old fellow," muttered the rider, tightening the bridle-reins and speaking to the steed. "We must hurry up. The boys will be impatient. We are behind time, now."

Slightly pricking his steed's flanks with the spurs, the horseman dashed over the prairie at a rapid gait, sitting his animal so gracefully that he seemed born to the saddle. A few minutes of this, and then he drew a small roll from his breast, and, unfurling, held it aloft over his head.

It was a small blue flag with a white star imprinted in the center, and bearing a peculiar cipher in the corner. After waving this to and fro for a minute, the rider replaced it in his breast and then dashed on direct toward a peculiar-looking motte.

From the center of this island, and far overtopping the rest, rose three bare objects, not unlike the naked masts of a ship, clearly outlined against the sky.

Drawing rein when at the very edge of this clump, the horseman uttered a shrill, peculiar whistle. Almost like an echo came an answering sound from the timber, and then one man advanced upon foot to meet the stranger.

"We war expecting you, cap'n; leastwise we was a man. But you look mighty young fer sech a place," spoke the new-comer, as he gazed scrutinizingly at the horseman.

"Do I? But look—here are the signs; the flag, the whistle, the grip; then look in this corner. You see the cipher? Well—does it correspond?" at the same time he handed forth the blue flag.

Cap'n - ?"

"Captain Kit—yes," laughed the young man. "But are the boys here—and how many are there?"

"Leven—with me. Tothers 'r' out on a raid. We num-

"Can they be depended upon?" ed-lliv and Tallandela

"Bet yer life! I picked 'em," was the proud reply.

"Are they brave? and will they obey orders without asking questions until the work is done?"

"Ef they won't, then swaller me up in a sand-storm! Ef you—or me—was to bring 'em face to face with the devil hisself, an' shake a finger at him, any one on the cusses 'd up an' go through him like a dose o' salts!"

"Good! but they'll never be tried so hard. The Old Boy is by far too good a friend of ours for that," laughed the young man; a clear, gleesome laugh that ill accorded with his words. "But lead on, I wish to see them myself. I can tell better then what to depend upon."

"They're right in hyar, anxious fer a squint at thar new boss. Better 'light. It's rather clus ridin' through this 'ere brush."

The captain dismounted and followed his guide; a burly, hairy-faced, rough-looking man, dressed in a nondescript garb, and armed until he resembled a walking arsenal. A few moments brought them to a small glade-like opening, surrounding the three dead trees, that formed a land-mark for miles around.

In this spot were collected a half-score of men and horses, the former rudely dressed but superbly armed, and who arose from their careless attitudes as the two appeared.

"Boys, this is the boss you've heard about-Cap'n Kit."

The parties thus briefly introduced gazed steadily at each other for several moments, as if they would read there what to expect for the future. Then he who had given his name as "Kit," spoke:

"Boys, I am glad to see you, and to find that what this man has told me is the truth. He said that I could depend upon you in every thing. He was surprised because I was no older, and I can see that some of you think the same. But do not go altogether by that. Young shoulders often bear old heads. You can test me before long, and then, if found wanting, and there is any one that you like better, I am willing to abdicate in his favor.

I will tell you how you each can make a very pretty sum, by nightfall. There will be no risk, either, though I know that would make no difference to you. Will you do it?"

Yes!" was the general cry.

"Good! Had you asked what it was, first, I should have told you to find out for yourselves. I want no balf-way trust. There must be only one voice—one captain of the band I command. But listen. There is a man—a cattle-drover from Louisiana—who left Nacogdoches at the same time I did. I had quite a talk with him and found out that he was intending to buy up a drove, and had the hard cash to pay for them. By my advice he is coming here, to buy of the farmers at the Bluff. I kept trace of him, and he will be along here before many hours. We can stop him, and once securing his gold, can dispose of him as the majority votes.

"How do you like it ?" be well at all

There was a general chorus of approval, and the outlaws—for such they evidently were—seemed highly pleased. The majority, but not alki

One of the number, a small, slight built man, with a most villainous countenance, muttered to his neighbor and then glanced doubtingly at Captain Kit. That worthy's eagle glance did not miss this, and leveling one finger to indicate his meaning, he said:

"You fellow—step out here and tell me what you are growling at? It don't sound well, my good friend, and besides, it is a very unhealthy habit. I have known more than one good-looking fellow—like yourself, for instance—to go off very suddenly from its effects."

The man stepped forward boldly enough, but stood before the stranger with a sullen, downcast look.

"What is your name?"

"Cock-eyed Smatters."

"A nice name to sleep with! What was it you told that man?" sternly added Captain Kit.

- " Yer name-that's all."
- "He has ears—he must have heard it for himself. I spoke loud enough." A spoke to the form of the second of the sec
  - "Your t'other name, I mean." in the land of the work
    - "My-what? I don't understand you. Speak out plain."
- "Wal, you say you come from Nacogdoches. I see'd you this mornin! I's and the come from Nacogdoches.
- "You did? I must doubt that, my man. It is not every horse that can cover so much ground as mine has done to-day! But what do you mean? Are you drunk?"
- "No, I ain't; I mean that I see'd you this mornin', over nigh Pierson's ranche. I mean that you be none other than Kirk Dalton, herder to the ol' Judge."
- "You are a fool-or crazy. I know no such persons as you mention. I have not been in this neighborhood for over a year," anguily cried the Captain, nervously tingering a revolver at his belt: (1999) the order of pasts of the latest of the la
- . "Smatters ain't to blame, Cap'n," interposed the man who had advanced to meet the new comer. "Fer you're the puffect image o' the boy he names. I more'n hafe b'lieved you was him, at first. But in co'se it cain't be."
  - " Am I so much like him, then?"
- "So much so, that of he was hungry, an' 'd chaince to see ou, he'd be puzzled to know which mouth to stick the grub nter! He would so!"
- "Well, we will talk this over hereafter. Now I want you to get in a line and give me your names, so I can put them on the list, and answer whatever questions I may ask you."

This request, or rather order, was promptly obeyed. Probably not two of the eleven gave the name they had been christened by—supposing they had ever undergone that ceremony—but these they did give, were at least significant, and fally answered the purpose.

An. Ly them were nom de guerres that were then, or have since i come, notorious upon the Texan border. The names of men who, in a better cause, would have been called heroes, but who were demons in this.

There were Old Mose, Bob Rattlesnake, (so called from his restless eyes, that when excited fairly omitted magnetic spacks, or glared like those of an angry cat in the dark,) Uncle

Buck, Yankee Zeke, Corneracker, and others who may be introduced as we proceed. And others who may be in-

This done, one of the band was ordered to climb a tree and keep a close look-out for the expected drover, and then the others composed themselves to carcless whiting. The sun sunk b hind the horizon, and the gray shales of twilight were settling over the earth, ere the welcome cry came from the tree-top, causing all below to spring to their feet in eagerness.

" Thar he comes I'll the Captain Kit cautioned his men to keep silent, and advanced to the edge of the motte. Gazing out for a few moments, he made out the form of a single horseman approaching the timber island, and from the expected direction. Although quite dusk, he did not doubt but what this was the drover he had decoyed hither to suffer robbery, if not death.

Returning to the glade, he said, gayly:

"Well, boys, it's our game. I don't think he'll show fight, but if he does, leave him to me. It is two weeks since I drew bead on a live man. But wait until I give the word. No need of standing a chase when we can manage without."

The unsuspecting horseman drew near at a slow trot, his horse evidently jaded by a long day's ride. When he was within a hundred yards of the motte, Captain Kit rode forth and leisurely approached the traveler, followed by the outlaws.

The stranger abruptly drew rein and threw forward his rifle, as he peered keenly through the fast-gathering glown. But then, as if reasoured, he gave free rein and rode forwards as a supplied to be fast god! I then gave and it was to be forwards.

"Hallo, old man, which way?" cried Captain Kit, in a clear, mellow voice. "Response of the

"That you, Kirk? You gin me quite a skeer, a-ridin' out on a feller that a-way. What's up that you've got such a crowd wi' you—an' seek a gang, too!" he added, suspiciously, as the outlaws came nearer.

"A thousand fories!" cried Captain Kit, angrily. "This is not our game!"

. . . . .

" It's old Josh Crane !"

"Yas, Mister Robert Rattlesnake, Exquire, it ar' old Uncle Josh. An' s'posin' 'tie? The perarics is free, I reckon, to all as notions to tramp 'em. But you, Kirk; I didn't think ever to ace yer in such a pesky crowd," added the old man, in a reproachful tone.

He was a picturesque-looking personage, then and there, seen in the dim twilight, seated upon his jaded but still fiery mustang. His figure looked gigantic, outlined against the less opaque sky.

Six feet in his meceasins, Joshua Crane was built in proportion. Great as was his weight—over two hundred pounds—there was nothing but good solid flesh, bone and muscle in his gigantic frame. He carried his half century as well as many of half the number of years.

Brave as a lion, yet gentle as a woman, he was loved and heted, feared and respected for hundreds of miles around. It ved by honest people; hated by rogues and scoundrels. A true and faithful friend, he was a bitter and unrelenting enemy.

Naturally peaceful, he had yet been forced to leave a trail bind him him, marked with blood. An attack was made upon his cabin, but the outlaws fled, leaving three of their number dual upon the ground. Since then he had not been disturbed.

- "Who is this man?" demanded the outlaw leader of his followers.
- "An' you ax that, Kirk Dalton? Ax who Uncle Josh is?" oried Crane, in a tone of great surprise, mingled with reproach.
- "I den't know you-I am not Kirk Dalton."
- "I den't know why you shed try to deny your name, lad.
  It ain't like you. No more'n 'tis your kcepin' comp'ny with sol as Obl Mese an' Rattle-nake, thar'. But my eyes is still god. I ceuldn't forgit you of I tried, Kirk."
- "You won't believe me? Very well, then; so be it! Since you seem to think so much of me, Uuncle Joh, perhaps you'll be so kind as to give me a promise," retorted Captain Kita and a second seem of the sec
- "Et I kin, I will. I've al'ays bin your fr'end, Kirk, an' I shed hate mightily to hev to change my 'pinion this late in the day, but take the old man's advice, boy, an' steer cl'ar o' those rascals as you're with."

" Look hyar, Uncle Josh," angrily cried Rattlesnake, his eyes tlashing with a strange, deadly glare. "You'd best remember whar' you air, an' keep a civil tongue in yer old head. You mought chaince to git a bullit through it for you." in the said to "" An' you, mister hoss-thief, mind what I say. I niver yit see the time as I was afcard o' sech seum as you be, an' it's too late to begin now. You needn't finger your pistil. Afore you could raise the cock, I'd plug ye, friends or no friends. You know me-ef you don't, jist make another call at my shanty!" sternly retorted Crane, half raising his rifle.

"Hold!" cried Captain Kit, spurring his horse between the disputants. "Keep your temper, Rattlesnake, and you, old man, drop your gun. If there's any shooting to be done here to-night, I'll do it."

" Have your will, boy," cried Crane, slowly uncecking his rifle. "I'm a peaceable critter when they den't mis the wrong way o' the far. But of I am old, I don't how notely to spit in my face, and then rub it in."

"Well, we'll let that drop. You shall not be hart if you will give me a simple promise not to tell anybody of what you have seen and heard this night, for the next two weeks. Then you may use your own judgment. Will you do it?"

"You talk mighty queer, Kirk. Sounds is though you was tryin' to skeer the old man. I thought you knowed me let-ter'n thet."

"I am not trying to scare you. I only wish you to promise me this. I have good reasons for it, as you may that out before long. I want this little ride kept secret for a bit. More than all from Pierson."

" Wal, I don't see what you're drivin' at, lad, but I reckon I kin trust you. So fer two weeks from this night, I wen't tell ary pusson-not even Hepsy-that I met you hyar."

... ": Me nor the others?" ..... .... ....

"Them too, ef you say so."

"Very well. Now you can ride on. I wish you a very good-night, Uncle Josh," laughed the outlaw leader, in a pe-

"Won't you come 'long, too, Kirk? 'Tain't right fer sech as you to be a-ridin' the kentry over 'th sech trash as them. Come, go 'long 'th the old man an' let's talk this over," urged Crane.

"Sorry to disoblige you, uncle, but really must decline your invitation. I have more important business on hand. But remember your promise.".

"I do 'member it, but I never thought to 'a' see'd the day that Kirk Dalton 'd doubt the word o' Josh Crane, to his very face. It's a sad change—I cain't understand it!"

"Don't try to, then. It might strike in and injure you.

Good-night."

"Good night be it, then, sence you won't take a fr'end's adview," and Jeshua Crane rode slowly away, not once turning i.i. head to glance at those he left behind him.

There was a grieved expression on his homely but honest face, that told how deeply he had been hurt by the strange change in one whom he firmly believed was his young friend, Kirk Dalton. He had loved the boy as though his own child, and now to be denied, as he had been, was bitter indeed.

And then to see his friend associating with such men as Rattle-nake, Old Mose, and the others, many of whom were known outlaws and desperadoes, pained his heart still deeper. As he said, it was a sad change.

CHAPTER II.

KIRK DALTON.

Ir was an hour or so before sunset, upon the day next succee-ling that with which our story opens. As then, the scene is the wooded prairie. As then, the figure of a horse and rider might be noticed.

But the one now before us is a lady, who sits her mettlesome steed with the grace of an accomplished equestrian, adde ! to the peculiar-case and dashing self-reliance only attained by lessons learned in the wild freedom of the prairies of the great West.

She was rather below than above the medium hight, of a neat, well-turned and rounded figure. A brunette, with merry laughing eyes that could yet sparkle wickedly or flash with anger.

Her face was one of those irregular in outline, but yet perfect; plain in detail, yet when taken together, forming one bewitchingly piquant. It was the face of one formed to love and be loved; not worshiped.

Her checks were flushed brightly, whether with exercise or some other emotion, and there was an expectant look in her eyes as she reined her mustang down to a walk. Her quick glance noted the form of a horseman just emerging from the shadows of a little motte, and averting her head with a wicked smile, she gave free rein and sped off over the prairie.

The other gazed after her for a moment, and then, as if satisfied, urged his horse forward, calling aboud with a clear, ringing voice. As if startled, the maiden abruptly drew rein and turned her head.

"Why, Mr. Dalton, how you frightened me!" she exclaimed, as he rode up.

"I am very sorry, Miss Carrie, but I saw you riding by, and as I wished to speak to you, I called. It would have been uscless to have given chase, while you ride Cap," he returned, extending his hand, sun-embrowned and toil-hardened.

"One would think you had not seen me for a year, instead of only this morning, by that," but the proffered hand was allowed to clasp the tiny gloved fingers.

"It is not that alone, Miss Carrie," replied Kirk. "But I have something to tell you, and thought I would guard against your running away before I had your answer."

"Indeed! Then you may as well free my hand, for I will not speak while you hold it."

She spoke boldly enough, but there was a fluttering at ler heart that caused her eyes to droop and a bright thish to saffuse her cheeks. Right well she know what was coming; but as she made no effort to withdraw hir hand, it is not likely the expectation was very unpleasant.

And it was a handsome man that looked down upon her face; one that might well excuse such a feeling. Tall and ship by, his suit of half-hunter, half-ranchero sat pictures by upon him, and revealed his symmetrical form to great advantage.

Dark and sun-embrowned, with long black hair, slightly curling; eyes a deep brown, nearly black; heavy yet silken eyebrows, mustache and beard; a slouched felt hat, looped up in front with a simple knot of crimson ribbon.

Such was Kirk Dalton, the very counterpart of him who had called himself Captain Kit. If not the same, there was a won trous resemblance between the two.

"I hope you will, Carrie, for a great deal depends upon your answer. It will either make or ruin me. What I ask you now will determine the whole future of my life. Shall I speak?" "... "101", ") ... "180

"You are the strongest—I don't see how I am to hinder you if you choose to speak," retorted the maiden, with a shy but rogaish glance at his handsome face.

"I will, then, although you must know what I mean. I could not have hidden it from you this long had I tried. Carrie, I love you!"

" Indeed! and is that all?"

" All ?"

"Yes; I expected to hear something dreadful by your sole an tones and owlish looks. A murder, or a buried treasure, at the very least!" declared the girl, with a roguish laugh; but the color deepened on her cheek, and a soft light show in her eyes.

"Chric, did you understand what I said? If you knew how serious this is to me; how deeply, madly I love you, you would not tritte with my feelings."

"I do know it, Kirk, and I am a foolish girl. I know you love me—have known it for a year, although you have never spoken it in words before. If it had been very displeasing, I should have acted differently from what I have done," earnestly replied Carrie, raising her dark eyes and gazing openly in these of the young herder.

"Carrie, you can not -- you are not playing with me, now? You know what you say?"

and have for a year past," softly murmured the maiden, her eyes drooping.

-And then with a joy too great for utterance, the young herder bent forward, and winding an arm around her lithe waist, lifted her to his level, and then their lips met in the warm, passionate kiss of pure, holy love.

"There, now—you great, rough bear!" cried Carrie, blushing furiously. "See what you've done, mussed my hair, rumpled my dress, and let Cap stray off without me! Let me down this instant, or I'll; " (17) picture! Towns in "My darling!" fondly murmured Kirk.

"Let me down at once, or I'll take it all back-every word!"

"Well, then, wait here, Carrie-my Carrie now!--until I can catch Cap for you."

Gently lowering the maiden to the ground, Dalton rede off at a gallop toward the spot where the gray mustang was cating, and stooping, grasped at the rein. But at a shrill whistle from its mistress, the horse threw up its heels, and wheeling, soon; stood beside its fair rider.

"You promise better than you perform, Kirk," laughed Carrie, but her glee was suddenly interrupted by a little cry of surprise.

Dalton rode up beside her, and stooping, raised her lithe form from the ground and deposited it snugly into the sail-dle, stealing at least one kiss during the operation.

"That makes amends, pet," he laughed; then adding, in a graver tone: "but it is growing late and we had better ride toward the ranche. There is much I would like to talk over with you before meeting the Judge."

"Why so-you are not going-?" faltered Carrie.

"Yes, it is the better way. I shall tell him to-night, unless you forbid. Carrie, what will be the answer?"

"I do not know. He loves me dearly and respects you, as I believe. But then he is proud, and has often said that I should marry no man who was not rich and well bern," thoughtfully replied the maidence from:

"And I am neither!" bitterly added Kirk. "A poor herder, I have only one horse and my weapons. I do not know where I was born, who were my parents, whether they were honest or guilty, poor or rich. I feared my happiness was too great to last the middle of war I for

"Wait—it may not be so bad. But, Kirk, if I dearly love my father, I love you more. If he tries to separate us, he will lose me also. I could not live without you, now!"

Their subsequent conversation was more interesting to the lovers than it would be to the reader, and we pass it over. The sun had sunk behind the horizon for some time, when the long rambling "ranche" of Hiram Pierson was reached, and the two young folks separated.

Kirk Dalton left the premises and then struck down the river. His steps were slow, for his thoughts were busy.

After walking thus for considerably over a mile, he paused. Before him, upon the summit of a little knoll, stood a rude-looking but substantial log hut, from whose open doorway strained a blaze of ruddy light, that, added to the savory seent, told of the evening meal's being prepared.

Before the door sat a man, whose huge form told that it could be none other than the owner of the solitary dwelling, Joshua Crane. Not another such figure could there be found within a radius of: fifty miles. I have well

"Hallo! Uncle Josh, busy with your rifle, as usual," cried Kirk, in a cheery tone and word that I didn't be of the

The old man paused in subbing his long-barreled ritle, and glanced up. The friendly twilight hid a sad, half perplexed expression that rested upon his face.

He did not speak, but looked steadily at the young herder as though he would read the inmost workings of his heart. Dalon approached and seated himself upon the same hig, adding, wonderingly: I believe though the read rate.

"Why, uncle, what is the matter with you to-night? You don't answer me, and then you look so queer! What has gone wrong?"---

"Kirk, I was over to the 'Three Pines' this a'ternom," at I with sall Crane, slowly, while he gazed keenly at the young maned on to he heden' miles about mane provided in the

"Were you? Did you see any thing there to scare you, that you look so grave?"

&quot;Yas-I did!"

- "And what was it?" ; organ of the for I organ I organ
- "Kirk, tell me what you was a'ter thar, yist'day night?"
- "I there? I was not within three miles of the place all day! What do you mean, Uncle Josh?"
- "Not-then I didn't see you thar last night as I was a-comin' from Michler's ?! not the the see in the see of t
  - "You did not, most assuredly!"
- "You wasn't with Bob Rattlesnake, Old Mose an' t'other rascals? You didn't speak to me an' ax me to make you a promise not to tell nobody 'at I'd met you than' for the nixt two weeks?"
- "A promise? Why, Uncle Josh, you know this is the first time I have spoken with you for four days!" cried Kirk, in a tone of surprise, that if assumed stamped him as a most adroit dissembler.
- "I hev two eyes yit, boy, an' ef they ain't quite so sharp as they use to was, they're plenty good enough to tell a man 'at I've knowed for well nigh three years. I don't see why you shed deny yourself to me, now that we're alone. It was dask, I know; jist about 'like 'tis now, but I was so cluss that I could 'a' tetched you by retchin' out my arm. I see your face, I heerd your v'ice; how could I be fooled?"
- "I don't understand this, uncle. You say you saw me there at this time, while I was over on the 'larrens,' gathering in some cattle that had strayed from the herd. You must have been mistaken; and yet, I do not see how that could well be. There is no one in this section who so greatly resembles me, that you should be deceived," thoughtfully will kirk! Int it was a larred to have been me, that you should be deceived,
- "Was any one with ye, lad? Could you prove that you was that at thet time?" eagerly added Crane.
- "No, I was alone. Myrick was sick this morning, a. ! I had his share to attend to, as well as my own. I was alone all day."
- "I am sorry for thet—blamed sorry! I could a most dealt my eyesight an' hearin', ruther 'n your word. I would give my rith hyar, much as I'm 'tached to it, of so be you could on'y prove that you was some place else, jist at that the '."
- "What do you mean, Uncle Josh? Even if I were there, and with those you mention—which is an impossibility, for I despise them too much for that-where would be the great harm?"

- "Kirk, do you know what I found out thar, to-day?"
- " No-how should I?"
- "Not tifty yards from the timmer, that lies the body o' a man—a stranger—shot through the head. It war did some time last night, fer the dew hed fell on him. He wasn't that when I rid by, fer he lays plum acrost the trail."
  - "A dead man ?"
- "Dead an' robbed. An old man, too, who wasn't 'lowed no time to 'fend hisself, fer thar was no marks o' a scuffle."
  - " It is sail but what has all this to do with me?"
- "You war than at 'bout the time. You wanted it kept secret. You said when you rid up class an' see'd who I war boys, this ain't our game!" Thet poor cass war somebody's game."
- "You do not—you can not think that I had aught to do with this devilish crime?" hotly cried the young herder, springing to his feet.
- "Two days sence I'd 'a' knocked the feller down as would 'a' hinted at sech a thing. But I see'd you thar—I'd take my Bible oath on't!—an' yit you deny it. What kin I think, when I 'member who you was with?"
- "Uncle Josh, if anybody else should say half that much to me, I would stop his jaw with a bullet! You have been my friend for a long time, but even you can go too far," sternly replied Kirk.

And in truth, there did not seem much of the criminal about him, as he drew his tall, handsome form creet, with the moon-light glowing full upon his open, indignant countenante.

- "I hev bin your friend, Kirk, an' I will be yit, of so le yet.'ll 'low me. We must go to-night an' put the poor devil under ground. Ef found than, it'd raise a big mass, sure?"
- "No—I will do no such thing. I shall tell the neighbors of the lody, and have the matter investigated," firmly replied Dalton.
- "It would be the death o' you, boy! If I am axed on outh—as I will be, sure -I muss tell the hull truth."
- cent. And now, good-by."

"Won't you come in an' stop, lad? I'd like to talk this over 'th you, furder."

"No, You doubt my truth. I will never take you by the hand, nor eat a bit under your roof, until you take back your words. I do not know what I have done that you should try to blacken the character of an honest man. I am poor, but, thank God! there is no such stain upon my heart!"

With these words Dalton turned and strode rapidly away, not beeding the voice of Crane, who called after him. There was a heavy pain at his heart, for he had loved the old man almost like a father, and to be suspected of such a foul crine by him, was a bitter blow indeed.

The young herder strode rapidly away, toward the dwelling of Judge Pierson, taking little note of surroun ing objects. The thought of Carrie and the sweet confession he had won from her lip, quickly overpowered and dispelled all the suspicious evidently entertained by Crane.

Dalten had just crossed a little creek and a sen led the summit of a slight knoll, when he was sublenly aroused from his pleasant reverie by the unmistakable sound of foststeps. Clancing quickly around, while one hand instinctively dropped to his revolver-butt, he beheld the forms of three men at but a few yards distance, approaching him, yet evidently wishing to do so unheard.

"Hallo! there, do you take me for a deer, that you try to stalk me this way?" said the young man, half-drawing his pistol.

" Is that you, Kirk Dalton?"

- "And supposing it is me; what has that to do with you, Cock-eyed Smatters?"
  - "I've got sumthin' to tell you. Wait till we come up."
- "No you don't! Whatever you have to tell, it must be from there. I don't care about being over close to you, especially in the night-time."
  - " You ain't afcerd, be you?" sneered Smatters.
- "Not much! But there are several animals one libes but at a distance. A pole-cat, for instance—and yourself!"
- "You crow mighty loud an' peert, my covey, but we kin cut yer comb an' blant yer spurs. Coase, boys—one rish together an' he's our'n!"

As he spoke these words, Smatters leaped forward, evidently counting upon taking the herder by surprise, and overcoming him by their united strength ere he could draw a weapon. But in this he was doomed to disappointment.

Dulton's keen eye noted the movement, and divining his data, er, drew his revolver as he leaped back a pace, still facing his focs. Then one arm straightened out and the moon-leans gleaned upon the polished tube of a revolver.

There was a cadence in his tones that caused the trio of outlaws to pause, involuntarily, rather than from any personal four. Then the four personages were brought almost together upon the crest of the knoll.

Dalten standing tirmly creet, with been eye glancing along the polished tube. The three desperadoes half crouching before him, of telling knives and pistols that were not yet drawn from their belts.

"Cock-eyed Smatters, Yankee Zeke and Roaring Sam! A pretty little surprise party, upon my word! Halt! not a step party, or I fire! What is it you want with me?"

"Fust tell us who you air?"

"Kirk Dalton-as you ought to know by this time."

"Then you ain't the man that sent us? You ain't ('ap'n list, tryin' to feelish us?' a Hed Smatters.

"I have not sent you any place—as yet. Though if you do 't keep your distance, I will send you—apon a lenger jears y than you care about taking."

"Take Lim, loys! Ef Le's the boss he'd orter know better'n to fool 'the use so. Take him—but don't hurt the case!" smalled Smatters, as he crouched down and haped forward.

A clear report rung out, and, met in mid-air by the death-dealing bullet, the cock-cyed pathaw tumbled headlong to the grand, with a shattered skall. A single groan—a convulive cleating of the hands epon the seft earth, was all.

There cannot two more shots, quickly following; then a short, confinition that is the Asthe smake chare laway upon the field broke, the moscalisht shore upon a thrilling scene.

The deal man lying in his blood. The tall form of the young herdsman standing upon one side, with his left hand clutching the throat of Roaring Sam, who had been partially stunned by a blow from the pistol-butt, whose muzzle was now leveled at the crouching form of the third outlaw, whose check bore a ghastly wound.

"You've played your hand, Yankee Zeke," said Kirk, coolly, following the movements of the outlaw's head with the dark tube; "and you've got badly euchered. My pistol has three loads yet—half-ounce balls, and driven home—and if I crook my finger the least bit, where will you be?"

" Ef you miss, you're mine!" growled the outlaw.

"But I won't miss. Don't try to draw that revolver! If you do, I'll spot you! Tell me what you fellows meant by this?"

"Shoot an' be durned! I won't blow!"

"I have half a mind to take you at your word, by all that's good! But go your way. One is enough for now, and Smatters will never ambush another honest man. I give you one minute to travel. When I count twenty, if you are in sight, I'll crack your skull like a dog!"

In a slow, measured tone Dalton began counting. The desperado slowly rose erect, and said:

"All right—I'll go. You've got the 'vantage now, but I'll pay you yit fer this!" and he touched the wound upon his face.

"Don't blow. Better be thankful that it didn't bore your skull, instead of only cutting your cheek. Come—you had best start!" added Dalton, sternly.

The desperado turned as if to depart, but then whipping out his pistol he faced around and fired. But he had a cunning and watchful foe to deal with, and the young man dropped to his knees as the flame spouted forth.

Then he arose, and as the outlaw saw the deadly nazzle bearing full upon him, he turned and fled. Swift as was his motion, the bullet was still swifter, and with a wild yell of agony he sprung high into the air, falling in a quivering heap to the ground.

"It is rough, but how could I help it?" muttered Dalten, as he allowed the body of Roaring Sam to drop at his feet. "He brought it upon himself, and I warned him twice!"

Rapidly reloading his pistol, Kirk proceeded to where the Yatkee had fallen, and bending over him, lifted his head. Then he let it drop with a shudder.

The bullet had pierced his neck, killing him almost instantly.

The young herder was deeply pained at the occurrence, but turned to secure Sam, intending to take him to the ranche, where the case could be investigated, and their reasons for the attack learned. As he reached the spot, he saw the outlaw plunging into the underbrush bordering the creek.

Reviving, he had feigned insensibility, in order the better to off et his escape. When left by Dalton, the desperado had improved his opportunity.

"Well, it can't be helped now, though I am afraid it will make trouble for me," muttered Kirk, as he turned and slowly proceeded toward the ranche.

CHAPTER III.

THE OUTLAW'S DEN.

Tunian was considerable stir caused among the neighboring settlers by the discovery of a murdered man near the Three Pines, although nothing like what would have been in a longer settled country. Such crimes—murder and robbery—were by no means unfrequent, and then the unfortunate was a stranger.

There was mere interest in the story of Kirk Dalton, of his cacounter with the three desperadoes, and it excited strong feelings of both pleasure and revenge. The men shain were like lonly by their own stripe, being both feared and hatel by the houst settlers.

The young her lemm was generally liked and respected, and his words were not doubted when he told his story. Even doshin. Crane seemed to have forgotten his suspicions, and had advances toward the young man, who received them but coldly.

Roaring Sam had not since been heard from nor seen, but knowing his vindictive nature, Dalton kept a good grand against treachery. As for an open attack, that he did not fear.

There had come a body of new settlers to the neighbor-hood a day or so after the prairie tragedy, whose actions were so strange as to excite considerable cariosity among the older inhabitants. They numbered some half a score in all; there being no women or children in the company.

They seemed to shun all intercourse with the neighbors, and, selecting a site, began to creet a dwelling. The position chosen was a strange one.

Near the foot of one of the hills where at some remete period had occurred a land-slide, a spot was leveled and a stout one story house was creeted, its rear fairly touching the hill-id. And yet, when the house scene i completed, the work still went on.

The men labored stadily, wheeling out dirt, and Lewing timbers that were carried into the building, but which never came out again. Disagreeable suspicious began to fill the minds of the settlers as to the characters of these new-comers, but, as yet, nothing definite had been learned.

While the subject of the murdered stranger, and the two desperadoes were being discussed, Kirk Dalton kept his own counsel in regard to his love affair, at least from the cars of the Judge. He resolved to wait until he was cleared of all suspicions before speaking.

Liven under the most auspicious circumstances he knew that his prospects of success were gloomy enough. As he had said, he was poor, and knew nothing regarding his birth.

The Judge was a very proud and haughty man, who had left Virginia because, failing, he would not live as a poor man where he had been for so long, one of the most wealthy and aristocratic.

Emigrating to Texas, where he soon found an alvanture us location, he was now in a fair way to retrieve his 1 st f retune. But as his workly goods increased, so also somethis pride to gain strength. Was it likely, then that he would look favorably upon the suit of the young herd-man?

The lovers had daily interviews, and altogether possed the time very happily; but that one misgiving would often come up to shatter their hopes and dispel their bright dreams. But Carrie loved truly and fervently, and renewed her resolve to abandon all, should her parent prove inexorable, for the sake of him whom she loved far better than all else upon earth.

One evening, over a week after the centlict with the cutlaws, Kirk Dalton sought his employer in his own room, and travely opened his heart. His love rendered him eloquent, and he did not pause until he had revealed all.

The planter heard him out without any interruption. He was too polite to treat even a dependent rudely. But when he spoke it was in a cold, hard tone.

He hade the young man say no more. That his hopes were ridicalous and such as could never be fulfilled. That he liked him well enough, as a man, but a son-in-law such as he was evidently out of the question.

Kirk pleaded elequently, but it was like attempting to soften iron with cold water. Then he grew excited and declared that have her he would, if he had to run off with her before the father's very eyes.

"That is enough, sir," sternly said the Judge, arising. "I will excuse you further speech. Here are your wages, due, with a month's advance. I shall have no further occasion for your services. And since you have spoken so plainly, I will be equally open. If you are caught lurking around this house, or upon my premises anywhere, I will drive you from them with the dogs! I shall give my servants orders accordingly."

"You talk as though I was one of your negroes! But this is a free country, and if you try any such expedients, I will not be the only one to suffer. Do and say what you will; I love Carrie and she loves me. I will have her yet, in spite of you and your servants!" cried Kirk, bitterly.

"Enough, sir—go! Go now, before I forget myself and chastise you as your insolent throats deserve! I am old, but there is sufficient strength in this right arm yet. Go, I tell you, or I will call the servants and have them kick you off my grounds!"

"I will go-but not for long. You have my word that I will foil you; make the most of it," succred Dalton, as he turned and left the house.

He was met in the garden by Carrie, who was pale and trembling. She sunk into his arms, sobbing as though her heart, would break.

"Oh! Kirk, you have quarreled with father!"

"Yes, darling-- or rather he quarreled with me. That hope is gone now. I must leave you here, but only for a few days. Then I shall come and claim you. It may be best for us not to meet for a short time, as you will doubtless be closely watched. But I must hear from you."

"" And how?" ... . ... ... ...

"You know the live-oak on the hill by the ford? It is hollow, and you can easily drop a note in there without being suspected. By day after to-morrow, at the furthest, I shall expect one. Will I receive it?"

"Yes-yes, I will do it. And you?"

"I will do the same. I can keep you informed of my plans, and you must tell me how you are treated here. Now, Carrie, can I depend upon you? Will you redeem your word, so often given, when the time comes?"

"I will! When you bid me come to you, I will obey. I am all yours-through good and evil-joy and sorrow!"

"My darling!" murmured the enraptured lover, as he strained her to his heart in a wild ecstasy of joy.

Just then they were interrupted by the voice of the planter calling his daughter, and fearing to be discovered should be linger longer, Kirk pressed one passionate his upon her pale lips and then glided away into the shadows, just as the father came down the walk.

The exterior of the log-house built by the new settlers was dark and gloomy, although well lighted within. As it may be reverted to, more or less frequently, hereafter, a glance at its interior may not be amiss.

There were two good sized rooms, nearly square, with an open doorway between. Both were now lighted up and co-cupied.

In the two there were probably twenty men, all fold, rough, villainous-looking fellows, rudely dressed, but superbly armed, with ritles, revolvers and knives. They were gathered around a couple of rude tables, paying assiduous devoirs to the bottles and jugs of strong liquor that thickly studded the tables, and conversing in eager but low tones.

Among their number there were several men well known at the settlements, whose presence would have still further strengthened the suspicions entertained of the new comers, could they have been seen. It was quite evident that the strange settlers were none of the most honest.

"Sam, you hain't tuck that 'ar Dalton yit, hev you?" askel Bob Rattlesnake, addressing the worthy Roaring Sam.

- "No, but I'll do it yit, though! Cuss the devil! I kin feel his claws a-grippin' my neck yit! They're wuss'n a black-mith's vice—a durned sight!"
- "What is the boss so durned perticklar about us not a-Lurtin' him fer, anyhow? We could easy pick the varmint off ci so he'd on'y 'low us to burn powder," growled Old Mose, as he wiped his lips with a not over clean shirt sleeve, after "throwing himself outside of" half a pint of corn-juice.
  - "D'ye know what I think?' whispered Bob, confidentially.
- " " No-how sh'u'd we?"
- " " You won't blab ef I tell ye?".
- ". " No-honor bright !"
- "Wal, then, durined of I don't b'lieve 'at Cap'n Kit an' Kirk Dalton is the same critter! One feller couldn't look more like hi self 'n they do, an' then he sw'ars as he'll shoot the fart feller as hurts this Dalton. I've tried to see 'em both at a time, but I cain't. Ef I find one t'other is missin'. I tell you, I b'lieve I'm right. Wish I had as many dollars as I'm sure they're the same!" declared Bob, emphatically.

"I don't think so!" slowly replied Old More.

"An' I tell you 'lis so! I say that Cap'n Kit is-"

The words of the despera to had been spoken in a loud tone, but he suddenly paused and stanmered, as the outer door was that even and the till form of the chief appeared upon the threshold.

"Well, Mister Rattlesnake Bob, why don't you go on? Cap'n Kit is'-what?"

There was a peculiar shade upon the leader's face, and a glain in his dark eye that awed the desperado, bold and important as he generally was. His eyes dropped, and his voice was husky as he faltered:

"Nothin'; I was on'y jokin'."

"It is an unhealthy practice, let me tell you, and I advise you as a friend to break it off. I tell you, my man, that tongue of yours is entirely too glib of speech for your own good. Beware how you let it wag about me and my affairs, or I may crop it for you!"::

The desperado did not reply, but as Captain Kit turned away, he cast a covert glance of deadly hatred toward him, that might well have caused its recipient to feel uneasy, had he noticed it.

"Boys," said the outlaw leader, "drop the liquor now, and listen to me. Our den is fixed up all correct, and it is high time we set about regular business. These meddlesome settlers are growing two inquisitive, and we may as well give them something to talk about. Even if they take to arms, we can hold our own against all the force they can muster, either here or in the open field.

"The other boys will probably be here to morrow, and we must set them a good example. We'll make a raid on Judge Pierson's corral, and then take Claiborne's. The two will give us as many head as we can manage. We can take down the river to the lower ford, and then throw them off the track on the 'shingle.' Long enough, any how, to allow of our reaching the first station. Once there, our share of the work is done. They must look to the rest."

A low but hearty cheer answered this speech, and from the cager faces, it was evident that the ones there as embled were not in favor of idleness.

"Good! I see you are just what I expected. Now we will arrange it all, so that there may be no chance of mistake. You, Red Hirble, will take half the men and go through Chaborne's corral, only choosing the best head; two for each man will be enough. I will look to the Judge's. But mind ye, boys, there must be no blood spilled, unless you are driven to a fight. If you can't get around it, why then give them the best you've got."

"Air we to come back hyar to-night, cap?" a-ked Men.

"Yes. It is only some forty miles in all; we must be here in case we should receive a call in the merning."

The chief now proceeded to give his men more minute directions, as to how they were to proceed, and then took a place at one of the tables, helping himself freely to the liquor. It was yet too early far them to make the venture.

CHAPTER IV.

THE MIDNIGHT RAID.

AFTER another hour had clapsed, the men arose, and opening a heavy door in the rear of the building, entered a sort of tunnel, of perhaps seven feet in hight by five wide, excavated from the hill. After a few yards this suddenly expanded into a good-sized vanit, dimly lighted by rude lamps.

The roof was braced up by numerous strong timbers, and at one end were a number of rude stalls, where were secured a score or more of horses, although there was accommodation for thrice that number. At the opposite extremity was a strong slib door apparently set in the earth, and which was secured by strong bars and braces.

The animals were speedily saddled and bridled, when they were led forth from the cave, through the building. As he main at the building, and said:

"Now, hoys, you must be more cautious than usual, to-night. Keep well barred, and don't admit anybody unless they give all the signals. If our plans succeed, this night's work will not a tidy little sum for each one of us. You will share equally with the rest, and have less work as well as risk. Can I depend upon you?"

"Mighty right ye kin, cap'n. You'll find the den as safe as year have it. Tom 'usl me kin beat off any who may 't ict us hyar."

any treat the before we get back, do the best yeu can. You may be k for us about day-dawn. That 'll do now. Go in and close up. Come, boys, we must go. A long read lies before us, and we have no time to lose?'

Red Hirble and Captain Kit separated, each followed by ledf a score men, and rode rapidly toward their destination. With the reader's kind permission, we will follow the latter.

That leader seemed well acquainted with the Ly of the house and grounds, and led the way at once to the most fessible point of the horse corral, as well as the safest for their purpose.

In these days of mammoth stock-farms, the scale of Hiram Pierson's operations would be looked upon with centempt and derision. But at the time treated of he was accounted a well-to-do man.

His wealth consisted in most of cattle and sheep, but he had some few horses, more for home use than sale. These—probably fifty in number—were corraled every night to guard against their straying, either with or without help.

The cattle, at this season, were allowed to keep their range, both day and night. There were men whose regular duty was to watch both corral and pastures, at night, but oftener they would sleep the time away than keep honest gaird.

"Mose," muttered Captain Kit, "light and let down the fence. Boys, half of you come with me-hring year raps along—and help select the brutes. The rest will stay here that them fit for traveling."

The men selected rode silently through the gap in the coral, knowing that while mounted they could succeed in the purpose easier than when afoot. As an offer, they can more risk of being seen and made a target of, but for this they little cared.

They were generally men who loved danger for danger's rake, for the more excitement of the thing, and now when this was strengthened by the knowledge that they were working for their beneft, it would be a great carger that each awe them.

"Take your time, boys," called out Captain Kit, in a guarded tone; "there is no hurry. Pick and character. We can't manage more than two apiece when preselector her lire time as we will be now. Take the flower of the lire is quick."

One by one the lest looking animals were selected and caught, then passed over to those who stood outside. In this manner nearly a score had been secured, without the slightest disturbance.

But then there came a sudden interruption. A loud cry trese from one end of the corral, and a voice shouted out:

"Hello, that! what you- Thieves-hoss-thieves! Help hyar!"

As he yelled, the somnolent watchman sprung to his feet and discharged his ritle at the maran bars.

"Take those you've got, boys, and travel!" yelled Captain Kit. "I'll stop this fellow's mouth and then follow you. Iti's as though the devil was driving you with a hot poker—off with you!"

The certicus, though knowing their young leader for so short a time, had learned to obey him, and without demur or passing to ask his reasons. And then the significant bursel to a regard bullet so close over their heads, told them what they might expect when the household was once fairly aroused.

With wild yells and hoots they sped away, half-leading, half-hiving the terrified and sporting animals they had stolen. With whickers of alarm the remainder rushed for the gap at hitshed madly away over the prairie, neighing and screaming wildly.

Capt din Kit urged Lis snorting horse toward the spot where ... could disting tish the dasky figure of the watchm n, whose cries and shouts were still being sent forth.

The outlaw knew that, could be silence this man before the class came up, his men were safe for the present. They would gain such a distance that pursuit would be useless.

"Carse you!" he hissed, as he leveled his revolver at the flower "stop that informal screeching—do you hear?"

" Who air you?"

"Captain Kit—who sends you to the devil, his brother!"
stanted the outlaw, as he fired

The tean stage ered; he did not fall. Then his arm rose at it is bright this hace inputed the sharp report. With a leaf tall dyell, Captain Kit threw up his arms, and recling in the sallle for a moment, fell heallong to the ground.

His horse dince I mully around the inclosure for a short spell, and then wheeling, fiel through the gap, uttering a shrill yell of triumph and rejoicing at being freed from a cruck rider and master.

With a shout of exultation, the watchman spring forward and stooped over the prostrate form. But he uttered an exchination of wondering surprise and started back as he carglet sight of the pale and ghastly face revealed by the name's rays, in of paraga recomban hologon.

The entire household had been aroused by the confined uproar, and now flocked, half-dressed, toward the spot, bearing such weapons as had lain most convenient to their hands. At their head strode the tall form of the planter, Hiram Pierson.

- "Hallo! there—you watchman—what does all this mean?" he cried, as he reached the gate of the corral. "Where are you?" manner is all the corral. "Where are
  - " Hyar, Jedge," said the man, advancing.
- "That you, Myrick? But what's up? Where are the horses all gone to?"
- "To the devil, I reckon, post-haste! Twould be hard to say whar else."
- "And the firing? Confound it, man, speak out! What is the matter?" raged the Judge, opening the gate and entering.
- "It means jest this. A lot of the critters has bin stale-tothers hes run away!"
- "Stolen—and you here? What were you doing—where were you?"
- "I war hyar. Mebbe you heerd my shot. But they war too many fer one man to stop. They rid away—that is, all but one on 'em," slowly added the herder.
  - "But one-and where is he?"
  - "Out thar-lyin' down, sorter."
  - "You shot the scoundrel?"
- "'Pears like I did. Anyway, he dropped as I tetched trigger. But I'm dub'ous 'at I've did a harm, Jedge," said Myrlen, showing the way.
  - " How so? He was a thief-wasn't he?"
- "I thought so. Anyhow, he shot at me fust. He must 'a' knowed 'at I niver pull twicet on one critter. He's see'd me shoot afore."

"Then you has been rely all the Judge, as they altered toward the spot where the outlies had retill lay.

"Da't 1? H ven't I ril with him for n'arly a year?"

The Judge stooped over the sensel is body, and then be too drive with a cry of surprised horrer. He too had evidently for a 1 the man.

" My G 1! Myrick, it is Kirk Dult n!"

"Jets Calmily reported the borderer, a true reported in his voice. "This is bed the ball. If I'd at known what we was, I'd at the melt twicet afore pulling on him. But what could I do? His for was in the dark—he rid at me so for each termined, like, and told me he was Cap'n Kit or since outling it in name, and swere he'd and ment to the dark for a this mark by a—he had fast—as you kin so for your off. The ball created my name. Then I—I dropped the poor cass?"

"You did right—perfectly right, Myrick, and no one can blane you," warmly cried the Judge. "He deserved it all but my Cod! I didn't think that ball of him! A horse-thicf

-- 1 1. Tr 1 Tr 1"

"Lest -1 of ! He epens his eyes?" er rerly cried Myrick, his ling to ide the ordine. "He ain't dead-I didn't hill him! Praise the Lord for that?"

"It would have been better for him, perhaps, if you had," I mily all li Pier on. "Do the is better by a bullet than a rope!"

" A repe for him-hong Kirk Dalt n?"

"Yes! He is a thicf—he has stolen my horses. That is a crime punished only by thath, here, as you should know. Your word will han thin!"

"Parth represent this also the There we the District the District was a beastisist?"

"But you say he tried to kill you—that you saw his man

"Im view in missel. In some ed-Thelbian seco.
No. 10. A to the letter in the tent of the some of the letter to the letter to the letter in the letter in the letter in the letter.

East letter "

Captain Mit now raised his head, and as he bahald the who stream that him, he placed around in astoniahment. Then the truth the hed upon his mind, and he attempted to draw a pistol, uttering a snarl of rage and fury.

But before he could use it, a strong hand clutched his wrist, and wrenched it from his grasp. Then in obedience to their master's commands, the servants securely bound the cuthaw with his own belt. Then the little party returned toward the ranche, which was now fully lighted up, and the scene of a great bastle, as the women servants, greatly alarmed and confused, ran to and fro.

"Bring him right into my room," said the Judge, entering the building. "I wish to question him.

"But the hoss critters?"

"It is too lite now to start after them. They are beyond sight and hearing, long before this. We will wait until day-light and then take the trail and run them to earth."

Captain Kit was carried into the room and deposited in a chair, still bound. Though there burned a strong glare in his cyes, a half mocking smile wreathed his lips.

"Well sir, what have you to say for years If?" began the Judge. "What were you doing in my corral?"

"Taking a look at your horsell h -- that is all," was the cool reply.

"You have seen them often enough, Kirk Dalton. Do you know what may be the result of this night's work?"

"Better than you do, perhaps!"

"You are a horse-thicf, caught in the act, and you must know the punishment for such a crime."

"I do—a hempen rope cravat, and a dance on rothing. But the reed is not yet planted that will grow the rope for my neck."

"The sun will never set for you again, Kirk Dulten!" solemnly added the Judge.

"It will, and I'll tell you why. I am her sthief, if you plose, but I can muster four score good and true had who would face the devil him off if I hade them do sho We are a resultry or maized back, and each member is so in to said feel his life, if need he, to sid a count to Their maise is the limit for book." If I am harmed, they will say publicantly settlement from the face of the earth. That's my sife rund?

" I doubt your speaking the trath, by were I am red that it in is so, you should not escape punishment. I have treated you like an honest man and a gentleman, before this, and now you turn upon me and try to rob me. Kirk Dalton, I thought better things of you!"

"You say you have treated me like a gentleman? Is it so Polite a favor to swear you will hunt a man with dogs-that you will have your servants kick him off the place?" sneered the outlaw.

" Your actions since show that I was not far wrong in so doing."

"Not so. It was because of those threafs that I did this. I tell you then that I would not be the only sufferer, and I am not Half your horses are gone now. When my boys come back, they will make a clean sweep. I tell you, Judge

Pierson, you are doomed!

"You will only live to behold your wealth gone-your here barned, and your lands lail waste. You will live to see your child—the one whom you thought too good for me -- i.e wif-ha! ha!-of myself, or else some of the band. You will see this, but not much more. You will meet what you threatened me with—a hempen cord and a swinging bough !"

"Kirk, lad," said Myrick, coming forward, "don't falk that a-way. Say that you don't mean them words. You ain't a laterathic fil

" You are the man who shot me?"

"Yes, but I didn't know it was you. Ef I hed, I'd 'a' spotted myself as soon!"

Just at this juncture the door was fluor violently open and Carri Pi son entered. With an agonized shrick sie sprung for art. c. i kurching beside the outlaw, flung her arms around lin the ic, organic:

"O'l! Hirk, what does this mean? Why are you here-and a prisoner?"

" I' me and that he's a convicted hor "thief," colly added the Jacquas has trove to less nhis dan thter's arms. "Carri . aris -- ro to your room !"

" No-I will not! You want to murder him! You shall not while I live! I love him -- bye him!"

T. ir wier gently be sed his head and pressed a kiss upon the upturned face of the pale and troudling maiden. As he did so, a great drop of clotted the left line in her arm.

"My God! he is wounded! You have killed him?" graped Carrie, her arms falling nerveles to her side as the gery blotch caught her eye.

"No, durling, 'tis only a scratch. I am not hurt,' murmured the outlaw, and his arms moved as though he would raise her up.

The Judge stooped and raised the fainting form in his arms, and turned to leave the room. Carrie reseal up at this, and struggling desperately, strove to return to her lover.

"No-I will not go! You will murder him-ny Klik!

Let me go to him—he is woundel—he me ! m !

But despite Carrie's on leavors to free hers if, she was here from the room in the strong arms of her percent. The prisoner struggled fiercely to burst his bonds, but the structher belt was true and would not give.

He strove to rise, and doing so, fell to the floor, where how was pounced upon by Myrick and several of the servent. He was then raised to the chair once no re.

He cast a quick, surprised glance around upon the faces of those near him, and noted a possible expression upon that of Myrick. Then the borderer with frew to the further only of the room.

The Judge now retntered, and again commanded qualities ing the outlaw, but received no satisfaction. Captain His would not admit being one of the thieves, our well it he inform who were the others.

"Sam," added Pierson, addressing a servant, "take this man out to the stables and guard him well. Keep your open upon him all the time, and if he attempts to ear, she him without mercy. I will answer for it."

"You will answer for it sooner than you expect, may be p," cirniticantly retorted the prisoner.

".Take him out."

The outline was led to the lier with a five off of a citier should reduce then a start'h contact the piece. As he reached the door, led in a cottup to the term of the dependence of the tripped up his two a table at the terms of their grasp from his person.

Then turning, with a filter yell of rage and definee, he I will a pistol fall at the heal of the Jalle, as that person spring forward. At the report, Person fell to the floor with a fairt groun, and then, before a hand could be reisely to stop like, Captain Kit had vanished the right the open doorway.

The came back a single tainting laugh, and then all was still. As the servants theked to the entrance, they heard the quick transpling of iron shod hoofs, a shrill neigh, and ther another laugh of defant exultation.

The outlaw was free!

CHAPTER V.

A BITTER ALTERNATIVE.

Tun excitement was intense at this bold stroke for liberty, and no one thought of pursuit until it was too late. In the night the during of law could easily have builted them.

At first it was feared that the Judice had been kill I, but as one of the more collected batacol his head, their hearts grow lighter as they perceived no growth and had been done. It was only strain I, not injured to any extent.

The outlies hel not present to some an aim, and even this here I shot told how skills I he was with the weapon. One little half inch lower, and the Judge would have died.

Myrick was the only one who could have explained how the prisoner had so saldenly freed handle, and how he had countly the pistal after being distributed. But he kept his care had managed to pick up and secure the leathern belt that had fallen to the floor.

The mostless teles would have betrayed too much. As it is pelewer Captain Rat, the ber beer had treed him wells in the pistol into his hand.

Him Dair and we have been principal to as of bringing land there. He firmly believed that this name was his tellow-

Pursuit was made after the horse-thieves at day-dawn, but the trail was lost on the stretch of shingle that one of the ground near the lower ford, and at length the quest was abandened. After this, night and day the stock was a condino fear of sleeping on post now.

Carrie Pierson had been prestrated by the fearful blow, and had taken to her bed. The knowledge of her lover's being a criminal was indeed bitter, but still her love did not falter.

He had won her heart's love. Let him do what he might, she would never change. She believed that he would yet prove innovent; that there was some fearful mistake.

Nothing had been seen by the settlers of Captain Kit since that night. Some believed that he had that the country, upon being unmasked. Others shook their heads and maintained a wise silence.

The settlers at the hill foot still came and went, a ming to slow all intercourse with their neighbors, and was seepected more strongly than ever.

It was about mid forenoon of a day perhaps a work subsequent to the midnight raid, that a strong body of hors monthly ladong the path leading from the outlaw don, and to kup their route toward the settlement. They number I over a score, all told, and were thoroughly arms 1.

At their head, riding the strong costnat newtong that Was noticed in the first chapter, was Captain Kit. His brigg! face was a little pater, and her fall, perhaps, then us all and a snowy bundage could be seen beneath the bring of here it felt hat; but nothing else told of the severe wantible had received so recently.

At their head he soon reached the ranche of July Pitton, and abroptly drawing rein, he turned to his how. It. His Hirble, saying:

The year remain here, Hirlis, and kep the light structure of dang any michief. If you see the horizontal charter synthical little part Understand?"

"Mighty right I do!" responded the released and released plained giant.

" Min i-unless I give the signal, you are to do no i arm,"

Continued Captain Kit, as he leaped from the seddle and Strody rapidly toward the ranche, unheeding the frightened chords to I faces that were peering at him.

Running lightly up the veran like steps, he entered the open deriver crossed the had and turned the knob of the door lead-ing into the Jadge's "study." He did not falter or hesitate, sowing an intimate knowledge of the interior of the bailding.

Opening the door he entered, and then noisele sly closed it lehind him. However, the planter, who was scated at his door, was aroused, and turning, Judge Pierson sprung to his feet as he recognized his visitor.

"You here? How dare you, after—" he becan, in angry surprise, as he reached toward a loaded revolver that by upon the desk.

"I dire more than you think, Judge," coolly replied the outlier, as he drew his pistol. "Drop that wit you to ah it I are a died man! I came here upon a peaceful mission, but if you force me to extremities, you will suffer, not I!"

"A peaceful mission—you, and to me!" exclaime! the farmer.

"Yes; but before I make it known, just glance out the win low and tell me what you see."

The Judge turned his head as bade, and then started back with a cry of surprise.

Who are those men?"

They are honest people who call me Captain. I merely brought them along to ensure a decent reception. They have or birs to remain quiet unless I signal them. That signal I shall not give unless you force me to do so. But it I have, they will clean this ranche out in a twinkling. Now will you hear me?".

"I must. But be speedy. Your room is far more a rey it in a pinch, and it would be a pity to the year to note as a Has but is. But take a sent; this business may require some true to dispose of it satisfactorily."

"I prefer to stand."

"And I prefer that you sit. I am a little weak yet, from this favor," and as he removed his hat, the outlaw lightly touched his bandaged head; "but I could not be so impolite as to sit while you remain standing."

With a glance of deadly hatred, Jule Plers nround his chair. Captain Kit last hed; low and mellow it some

"Encly for me it is that looks can not hill. Remarking keen eyes, those of yours, Judge. But a trace to building. You remember upon what terms we let parted—I make this room?"

"Yes, and in the other, too, when you tried to man'r

"It may be as well not to recall that, my friend. The thought is not the most pleasant to me, and besides, length as a place an oath never to leave any thing haled new to make whatever I attempted; and the finey might strike me to make my word good in this case as well.

"But never mind that now. I mean here, where I asked you to give me the hand of your denghter, in marriage. You have not changed your mind since?"

"(hangel—are you crazy? Have your deals since then been such as to render a change likely? Yourstell try it res, shoot me, and then ask such a question?" crief Plats 1, in grily.

you will soon. You noticed my men out there? Well, I can muster full four times the number, any or all of wheel would glidly been this shell over your head, did I but give the word, and not be over-particular whether only rate were scorched or not. What I say they will do."

" Do you come here only to tell me this?"

"No. That is only the prolonie. It was not say, I so to impressupen your mind that I am not the pair, file I say a repeat that you once know. If I am a hard C. f. I am a king among them. I commonly the your parts of the parts

"I believe you said as much before. You are the ten well as insolent, Kirk Dalton."

"short and sweet, is your tare, then? Very well; it is immaterial to me. Then, to come to the point, I have your daughter, Carrie."

Pierson glared at the outlaw.

- "And more-your daughter Carrie loves me."
- " A lie-a base lie!"

"You know that I do not lie. You have heard her say as not a her-elf," coolly replied the desperado; although there was an angry glow in his dark eye that told how little he relished this plain language.

" Go on-finish quick, or I shall choke!" muttered the Julie, trying in vain to compose himself.

"Don't; it might be disagreeable—to you. Well, then, I ask you to give me your daughter Carrie."

"Never! I will die first!"

Wou certainly will die if you do not, and then lose her bell a. I tall you that you have no choice. If you refuse me now, I will see the you out of here; I will give my men free license to act as they will. There will not be a hoof left you and to stick upon another of the building. Your shape will be run of and sold, and you will be rossted at the fire made by your own house!"

The Julge could not speak. He seemed to be sufficenting.

His fin rers worked convulsively at his throat.

On the other hand, if you give your consent, I will disbent my men, and settle down here as an honest and peacefoldizen. I agree to protect you from all other persons, and treatly has an honest father-in-law. Carrie loves me. Size will study consent to this. It will be a joy to her, and will save you from all the evil I threatened."

Still the Judge did not speak.

"She will be mine anyhow. If she will not leave you of Ler own free will, I will carry her off. But I should not like to be that. I love her, and would make her happy. If you are a saible, all will be well. If not—I have told you the consequences, and I swear that I will make my word good?"

" Y. I are a devil, Kirk Dalon!" mattered the Judge, great drive of perspiration starting out over his face.

He say is it too plainly that the orthwhich spoken no more than it, trail. He had to power to make his the its feed and the context of whatever force the honest of there each gather.

And that he would be as good as his word, no one who heard this litters of and saw his sternest face, could doubt for a moment. Death and ruin stated the Julie fall in the face.

Traé, fliere was an alternative, but it was one that could not be accepted. A thousand coaths rather!

"You are about half right, I believe, Judge," h. the l Captain Kit. "But never mind that. Time places, and I have not yet received your answer, I believe. You have hear I all —now your decision."

"It is quickly told. Do your worst; I defy you and your gang of cut throats!" desperately crie i Pierson.

"You are foolish, man—and worse than foolish. Remember that she will be mine anyhow, whether you consent or not. The only effect of your opposition will be to its are your own death. Reflect well before you answer," coldly replied the outlaw chief.

"I have retheted.—I have answered. I will not submit to such a rescally persecution. I will enter into no tyre ment or compact with a nardering horse thief !"

say. Still, I advise you to bridle your tongre. I can stand a good deal, and know how to make allowance for men in your unpleasant predicament, but if you go to far, it will be the worse for you.

Week from to day to reflect upon my proposition, and then I will come for your decision. I warn you to passe and think twice before you reject it, for I will be as good as my work

"Another thing. Beware how you attempt to fiel me. I will have your actions well watched, and not a person will stir out ide the building, but that I will know of it. If you attempt to flee, or to send away your daughter, that will be the signal, and my men will be turned loose to work their pleasure.

"But I have said enough. I guess you imberstand me. Remonder, in just one week from to-day, I call for your areas on Until them, good-by. Please remember me to your character decenter—my Carris—had had and with an irraical had by Captain Kit turned and strode toward the increase.

and turning cocked and leveled it at the outlies. As the me-tallie click met his car, the desperado turned with a sneer, saying, in a nonchalant tone:

Fire, Julie. It must be a great pleasure for a min to I note his own death doom. My men are only waiting for some such sound, and I warn you, they will make a clean job of it."

The Julie stood glaring at his strange antagonist, with the pistol leveled full at his head. Captain Kit did not quail or the an atom, although he could look straight into the duk tube of death.

"Come, old fellow, that is enough. You can't shoot me—yer are afrail to touch the trizzer. Drop that, and act decent. Drop it, I say!" impatiently cried the outlaw, advancing a step.

As if compelled to obey against his will by one more powerful, the July suffered his arm to droop, and then he sunk back into his chair. With a low, taunting laugh, Captain Kit turned and left the room.

Gizing out through the window Plerson beheld the daring outliew valid lightly to the saddle of his magnificant clustant, and then ride at a madgallop away over the plain toward the hill retreat.

As the riders vanished from view, he bowed his head upon his hands and sunk into a bitter and painful reverie.

CHAPTER VI.

JOSH CRANE AT WORK,

Uncle Jose Crane appeared unusually restless and fid jety as he sholled aimle-sly around the little rade cabin which he called his home. Full twenty times during the last two we as had the worthy Mistress Hopsy wondered whether the climan had not "gone and got littlen," he as to deep or and out of sorts.

of his young frame's saiden change from an houset, steady, trustworthy settler, to a pitiful, mischief-making horse-thief, if not murderer. He had loved the boy so strongly and deeply, that it was very hard to bear.

At first he had been inclined to doubt even his own senses, but now he was no longer alone. There were full half a score who could prove the black deeds upon the herder.

This last affair—that of robbing Pierson's corral—had so the old man's wits to work, and he strove in vain to see his way clearly; the mist was too thick. At the best there was only the shadow of a plan in his mind, but one of which he hoped to make something.

He, like the rest of the honest settlers, had entertained his suspicions regarding those located near the hill's foot, and a short time since, while passing by the place, Crane had observed Kirk Dalton ride directly to the log-house. Could it be that he was staying there?

At length old Crane abruptly paused and a glow of decision overspread his countenance as he muttered a few wor is inaudibly to himself. Then he entered his little cal in.

"Hepsy, old gal," he sail, as he took down his long, heavy ritle from the deer-horn brackets above the fire-place, closely examining the state of its lock while speaking, "whenever you feel like it jest go to reset. Don't wait up for not."

"Whar' you goin', pup?" the little oil woman rejoinel, with an uneasy look upon her face and still bright black eyes.

"Don't ax questions, Hepsy. 'Taint no good habit.
Mought make a feller tell a lie, fu t thin "."

"Josh, you're goin' to meddlin' with them fellers. Den't do it. They hain't pestered you, an' if they're the kidney you think, the sooner you let 'em be, the better."

"I'm old enough an' ugly chouch, too, H psy, to take keer o' myself. But you rest casy. I wen't git inter no fass. I'm goin' to play moke, like, an' see of 'tis rady Kirk as is stoppin' thar'. I hope 'tain't, for onless I greatly mass my gass, that is a red-hot hole o' ho'nets."

"But you said you see him?"

"So I did, an' at the Three Pines, too; but he swars I didn't. It can't be that ther's another feller so much like him; an' yit it must be. Don't seem like the boy could 'a' changed so mighty stabilist. But of I git a good squint at this one feller, I'll see of it's Kirk. You know the scar he had on his right hand—what the brin'le steer tored it? I kin tell by thet."

"You'll be keerful, pap?" anxiously added the old woman.

"Sire. Why fer not? I hain't tired o' livin' yit, of I be well nuch seventy y'ar, an' you air a leetle sharp o' the tongue out't in a while," chuckled Uncle Josh, as he turned and left the house.

He stroke along rapidly, and yet with a won brows degree of lightness for one who had passed through the trials and struggles of seven decades. He was following the same path as had Kick Dalon when attacked by the outlaws had by Cockey I Sanuters, but then abruptly leaving the beaten trace, he planged into a dense growth of underbrash, heading so as to approach the outlaws' den from the further, or southwestern side.

He had no plans mapped out, but trusted all to the spar of the moment. His principal object in the scout, was to gain a fair sight at the strange man called Captain Kit, and to harn whether or no he was also Kirk Dalton, as he half inred would prove the case.

The reward regularly define I plan, or rather skeleton of a plan, turning and twisting its lf in the cunning brain of the all harder, that the believed he would yet be able to carry on. More to confirm this resolve than another class, had be entered upon his venture this night.

As the ell hanter near the vicinity of the outlaws den, his later this pare and increased his contien. Thoroughly a paint I with the lay of the ground, he resolved to apera hit the half he rap a its satisfie, and then, trust to fortain. It is paramitar, to gain the desired information.

As you not correct the sale is a small by this we mean the more house parting of the community—had been allowed to approach within arm's length of the building. When so rulely repulsed, their curiosity was not sufficiently strong to incite them to a second attempt.

Dropping upon his stomach, Josh Crane glided with the silent eaction of a scrpent to vard the building. He could now and then discern a bright ray of light as the door opened, and could hear the sounds of many voices in excited conversation or revelry.

Evidently the outlaws were having a good time, and lead upon enjoying themselves. A grim smile shot athwart the regged countenance of the old hunter, telling that he was by no means displeased at this fact.

In a few minutes Crane gained cover of the south wall, and crouched beneath shelter of a scrubby bush. Then his hands were slowly and carefully passed along the wall.

A little exchanation broke from his lips, as if at some gratifying discovery. Then he drew his knife and set to work.

He had found that the house was built of legs, unhown, the interstices will by "chinked" with blocks of wood, then daubed over with clay. Upon this hope, his plans had been founded.

With his knife, Crane cautiously picked out the dried mul, piece by piece, until a small block was left free. This he also removed, and then placed his eye to the aperture.

The room was fully lighted up, and around the nulle table, sat over a dezen men, all more or less under the influence of liquor, and still paying assiluous court to the subtle denom that wielded such influence over them.

He could recognize several of the number as men of whom he had long been suspicious, and some of whom he had sees with Kirk Dalton on the night of the stranger's murler at the Three Pines. A shade of anxiety overspread his honest countenance as he glanced around the room.

He dreaded lest his worst fears should be confirmed, that he would find his young friend and Captain Kit to be one and the same man. For the time, however, he was disappointed, most agreeably.

The outlaw leader was not in this room, and if in the outer he kept so close that Crane could not catch a glimpse of him

Satisfied of this, Jo h turned his attention toward the conversation of those nearest to him.

"H'was a food hall thet we made that night, at Pierson's an Claibern's," grunted Bob Rattlesnake, or Carter, as he had been christened. "The boss was lacky in gittin' off as he did Way didn't you fellers ride down that cass, Myrick, afore he tuck the cap'n?"

"He is the ske had be when the feller hollered out, an' he'd so the lib hash. We did, in course, 'ca's; the cap'n ain't a feller to be fooled with; not much! We heard the shootin', but the little 'twas him—see? We rid on, an' s'i ected him to jine us, every minning but he didn't, an' so as we knowed it'd do noget to turn back then, we kep' on an' left the critters as tell. Then we kem back hyar an' found the boss all right, 'cajt a skulp wound. He sail as how we did jest right."

"Tact's it? I didn't know jestly how it kem about afore. But now how is this? Is he that Kirk Dalton, or not?" whispered the fellow, with an uneasy glance around him. "An of so, what kind o' a cussed game is he a-playin', anyhow?

" You went none o' you blow?"

A gen red murmur disclaimed any such intentions, and then R sing Sam centinued:

"Wall you know how Cock-eye an' Yank was rubbed out, d n't ye? I jest got cl'ar by the skin o' my teeth. Ye see the cap'n kem to me an' told me thet that was a young feller as he wanted put out outer his way, for fear he'd make mische f. I axed who, an' he said Kirk Dalton.

felt ron no count. Ef we couldn't take him alive to be 'im go an' writ for another chance. He said that he'd short the felt rescharted even a ha'r o' the boy's head. I axe i him what we have as, but he told no that it was note o' my dark I blows; the teld I was aftered to take the j block rive it to a more o'the told rive.

"He pile is it the boys as he sail must holp in , an' they war them as he bands him mad for some recording. It him is a time to thinkin', that did, an' I sold through it it reward, to have been been and the man an' he face has like to knowed he was safe. You know the ret. He whipped use 'ca'se we didn't dar' use the we'pons. I got cl'ar as I tell ye, but t'other was killed.

through a hole, of so be it's big enough and straight on the little of little of the little of little

"I b'lieve ye, Sam. We must watch him an' see what game he's up to. I don't like it a bit, an' I think he's playin' things so 's to git us all inter limbo, while he'll fatten on what we've made."

Uncle Josh li tered to this conversation with great interest. He found that chars besides him had suspected that the two were one; and these men should know, if anybody.

Just then he saw the door open and Captain Kit enter. After a glance around the room, the oatlaw leader motional to one of the men, and entered the apartment beside which Crane was conceated.

He was followed by a tall, muscular man, a stranger to Crane. It was, however, none other than the limitenant, Rel Hirble.

Captain Kit drew a rude bench away from the table, at which all conversation had sublenly cased, and showed it against the wall nearly in front of the hole made by the py. Then scating himself, Captain Kit spoke:

stand, all those gaping fiels can hear not. That's but r. Now how about that job I tolly croff. How you done any thing toward it since I've been of he?"

"No, simply becalse I could ha't the I him," was the low raply.

would some of us have noticed him. I would give five him dred dollars to have him here, safe shat up in the little recein the vault?

"Ef it hin be did, you shell hev him," roll I the follow.

"Well, I think I can give you a hint of where he is that not here. I don't like the looks of Bob Rathes he do I so, youder. Do you go out on! wait for here it the spring be a will be there in a few moment."

Jo-h Crane fairly quivered with suppresed joy and anxiety, as be hearly and to this conversation. He believed they were I fring to be other than Kirk Palton, and the last words of the other chief resolved him to attend the rendezvous, although as a silent partner.

Positify he mitht glein some important news. At any ra'e there could be no harm in trying.

He unit returned the allusion to the live oak and spring perfeetly. More than once had be quenched his thirst there and rest I his weary limbs from the chase beneath the shaly tree.

To this print then he must go, and leaving his post of obs rv.tim, Crain glided rapidly and silently away, making a will d'ar, the letter to approach t'e spot without being so n. Discovery there would be almost equivalent to death.

And yet the old hunter fell into the very error he strove to giar lagalast. He did not know that Red Hirble had already s it hit the rendezvous, and was even then awaiting the captuin's appearance.

S, it wing to lose time, Crane was pressing through the his without much regard to silence, when he was sudderly start! I by the sound of a low, clear voice. Glancing in his direction he could faintly distinguish the outlines of a tall man.

" In that you, cap'n?" will the voice.

"Yas-lis metter d Crime, almost before thinking.

But he's and discover delas error. The outlaw had noted the lift receis his voice from the one he expected to hear, and significant the one of the mon was playing the part of spring a his and as he advanced, savier sternly:

" Held on thur', you feller; keep yer place, or by all thet's 1. de Fill re yer shell with a ballit! Who air ye, an' what 're you doin' hyar?"

Crain in the line I his plans. He saw that dil he atbinit to him a built from the drawn revelver would assertly overtake him.

Nille in the white he was until the curly Chife in the cretelan que would be his dechwarrant. The was but one resource; he must dipout of the state of the part of the state.

He did not hesitate but a moment, for he knew it was life against life. Unless victor he must be vanquished.

So drawing his heavy knife, in the use of which he was an adept, keeping it concealed by one arm, he replied:

" I kem hyar to git a drink. Is thar' any law ag'in' thet?"

"Who air you? You ain't one o' us-you're too tall !"

" You ain't nuther, then, 'ca'se you're as big as I be."

"None o' yer sass, my fine feller, but tell me who ye air, an' what you're up to hyar?"

"I told you onc't-a'ter a drink."

By this time the two men were not over ten feet apart; the outlaw bending his head forward the better to scrutinize the countenance of the stranger, while his pistol was half raised; then he started erect, uttering:

" Ha! you're thet Crane feller!"

"Yas, an' you're—a gone sucker!" hissed the old hunter, as he drew back his right arm with a lightning-like motion, and hurled his weapon full at the exposed throat of the outlaw.

True to its aim the heavy blade sunk to its very haft in the massive neck of Red Hirble, who tottered and fell, stricken unto death. But as he did so, his fingers contracted and the pistol exploded.

Instantly there was a loud tumult at the den, and the door opening, a broad blaze of light fell almost to the spot of death.

Josh Crave knew that to delay now would be fatal, and only pausing to extricate his knife, he turned and fiel at full speed, chosing such tangled paths as he knew could not be followed upon horseback.

He did not fear being overtaken there, and only felt related that he had failed in his main object. He felt confident that his blow had been fatal, and that no one would ever suspert the part he had played in this tragedy.

But in this he was at fault. Red Hirble had not been killed in tantly, and as Captain Kit knelt beside him, he managed to reveal who had dealt the fatal blow. And then, ever his dead body, the outlaw chief swore to wreak litter vestorance upon the murderer for the death of his loved friend and compale.

Joshua Crane hastened as rapilly as position to the board of Julies Pierson, and upon knocking was admitted by a servant, who said:

"Golly! Marse Crane, I was jest gwine fo' you. De Judge wants to see you right away."

"All right, Ebony; whar' is he?"

"Here, Crane," cried Pierson, making his appearance. "I have great news for you, my old friend," and together they entered the library.

CHAPTER VII.

THE ASSIGNATION.

On the second day following the night upon which Josh Crane disposed of Red Hirble, a horse and rider slowly left the spacious yard before Judge Pierson's house, and preceeded along the road leading down the river toward the lower ford.

This rider was a lady—Carrie Pierson. Her check is still pale and a thought less plump than when we first beheld her,

Lit her eye is fally as bright and sparkling.

There was an expression as of anxiety resting apon her fire as she glanced uneasily around her, and once she half-checked her here as if to alandon some purpose. But then with an exchanation of impatience, the maiden urged her here ferward at reckless speed, as if all doubtings were settled.

She did not draw rein until the hill overlooking the ford was surmented, where she paused beneath a good-sized live-oak tree. Standing upon her saddle she reached one hand into a small hellow at the base of a huge limb, and withdrew a small, neatly folded note.

Remining her sent the maiden tore open the missive and early pruel its contents. It contained but a few words, and ran as follows:

"IN THE SADDLE.

My Carrie:

"I will your note, and hasten to reply. I will meet you at M. I will meet you hat M. I will meet you my way to meet some of my men; but will have all the mere to tell you when we do meet. I shall expect you without talk, to-morrow. Until then, adieu.

'In haste, yours,

1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1

"KIRK."

For some minutes Carrie Pierson sat intently gazing at this note. There was a peculiar grayish pallor upon her features, that seemed unnatural.

In truth, this was an answer to a note of hers, asking for a meeting with the robber captain. Or rather she had first received one from him, requesting this as a favor, and she had consented.

Then turning her horse's head, Carrie rode slowly toward the hill retreat, evidently with the intention of keeping the assignation. As she neared the spot, her face lighted up and her eyes sparkled more brilliantly.

As she approached a small grove of trees at but a few hundrel yards from the outlaws' den, a horseman spurred from beneath their shade and rode rapidly toward her. As the forest breeze lifted the brim of his slouched hat, the features of Captain Kit were revealed.

"Carrie, my angel—my true-hearted woman—I knew you would not fail me!" he cried, in an ardent tone, as he clasped her outstretched hand; the prancing of her horse could not promise more.

"I trust you—why should not you trust me?" was the softly breathed reply, as her bright eyes met his fally.

"True—but come; it is warm here. The sun has little power yonder in the shade. Let us go there and converse. I have so much to tell you—so much to listen to."

Side by side the handsome couple rode until the shade was reached, when they allowed their horses to crop the short, rich grass, while they conversed.

"Let me assist you to alight, Carrie."

"No, I would rather sit here. It seems like old times. It has been so long since I have been able to ride, that it rests me more in the sad lle than it would there."

"So be it, then. But now—before less agreeable subjects—have you changed any, Carrie? Do you still love me as you did before I joined these men?"

"My Leart is still the same; I love you now as well as when you were my father's herdsman. What I said then, I report to we. When I love once, that love will never change, unless to grow strenger. Are you satisfied?" was the soft reply, as her wendrous eyes rested upon his face.

" Yes—a theusend times yes! My darling, pardon me, if framen at I doubted you. I feared you would look upon me as your father does. That you would think I had forfolial al. claim to your love when I became a thief."

"Then it is really true that you are the chief of this band of-of outlaws?"

"Yes, I am, and I glory in it. They are men—genuine mon; not malk and water imitations. And they look up to me as a mather superior to them. With the majority I am alm at rever 1. I am proud of them, and they are proud of me!"

"It must be glorious to be so free—so independent! Do you he w, Kirk, that if I were a man, I could almost envy you?"

"My darling, you can share this all with me. They will hall you as their queen as gladly as they do me as their king. Will put share it with mark. Say yes?"

"But my father ?" he situted Carrie.

"He he not changed? I gave him a week to decide; tonormalistic last day; I intend calling for his answer then. What will it be?"

"The same as ever. He swears that you must work your will—that he will never concent. But stay," she added, hereby, as the browned the outlaw chief darkened, "listen to her. Ye must not make that visit, Kirk."

"Mit not? My word is passed, and I will redeem it," was the stern region.

me?" softly pleaded Carrie.

"My men his with time. They would haigh at me if I should falter."

will submit."

"But well he?" on serly cried Captain Kit.

"I can he wis say that I have the strengest hopes of its all turning out right, if you will but be patient for another week. If, at the end of that time, he does not tell you to take me, I will go with you willingly without his consent, if you bid me do so. You know that I have great influence over him, and that I can do mostly as I please. I have had an interview with him since your visit, and he has yielded a little. He says now that if you had not robbed him, he would raise no further objections. Have patience, Kirk, and it will all come right, never fear."

"You promise this—that if I wait another week you will come with me, whether or no?"

"Yes-I promise it, if you ask me to do so. You can trust me."

"Yes, I can—I do. When we met last—that night in your father's grounds—you said: 'When you bid me come to you I will obey. I am all yours—through good and evil—joy and sorrow!' I will claim fulfillment of your vow then."

"If you do, I will obey you. Then I may tell father that you grant him another week?"

"Yes, if you wish. But I must call upon him to morrow, if only to satisfy my men."

"Now, Kirk, that you have set my mind at case upon that one great point, I must confess to you that I am very curious to see how you live out here. There are many and strange tales going the rounds, of the mysterious rites and incantations performed in that gloomy-looking house of yours. And some of the neighbors add that you have found a vast gold mine in there, or else why have you removed so much direction the building?" half laughed Carrie, glancing shyly up at her dark lover.

"They are fools, darling. The only gold mine we work is the purses of our enemies," laughed Captain Kit; but he gized keenly at the maiden as if to read her inmost thoughts.

"But you have not answered my question, Kirk?"

"Did you ask one? Parden me-I did not understand," he slowly replied.

"If not, I implied one. You are not half as quick-witted as of old, Kirk, or you would have effered to satisfy my curi-sity at once. It is I who should accuse you of change—not you me?"

"Li it only curiosity, Carrie?"

- "Why, what else could it be, Kirk?" with an air of sur-
  - "You will meet rough and rude men there, darling."
- "R uzh, maybe, but not rude, while you are with me. Besil s, I wish to see those over whom you rule, and to see if I should like to be their queen as well as I think," was her sit reply, and again her lustrous eyes met those of her lover.

For a moment he gazed intently into their depths, and then, with a low cry of intense parsion, he clasped her in his arms and preschawild, ardent kiss upon her lips. Her check was do ply a masch as size released herself from his embrace, but her voice was soft as ever as she spoke:

"Yen have obtained your reward beforehand; surely you will not day me my wish any longer?"

No, darling—I can refuse you nothing. You shall go, and if my of the men see fit to blame me for breaking the law I made myself, they will regret doing so. Come, darling, we will go."

Whatever of suspicion the outlaw chief may have entertained, was now discarded as without foundation, and he led the way with a look of gratification upon his face. It seems it is if a great weight had been litted from his heart.

For although the know that Carrie loved him, he feared that she would not move in direct opposition to the will of her father. But this four set at rest; he saw that his threat of compulsion would not need to be put into execution.

Hearisted Carrie to dismount at the door, and then securing the heres, he took her hand and led her forward, until the light holes of wondering surprise, not unmixed with dishere, that rested upon the rough faces of those who had the light of the derivations sund of hoof-strokes.

"Man and contades!" uttered the chief, in a clear, firm the "Year all know the laws that I made and you subsor, it. That note who were not lead members of our chief hay so all ever ent raths door, save as prisoners. I be at the w, for the first time, if not in spirit, in letter. Here a performant to say a alast it?"

E.c.

"Good, Hardress. It saves us both trouble, for my mind is made up. But now I will explain. This lady whem you re here is my promised wife, and it may be that at a me day not far distant, you will be called upon to obey her will as well as mine. She has half promised to become your queen f"

"Hooray for her! Three cleers for the queen o' the band!" yelled Hardress, and then a score of stentorian voices caught up the refrain until the old hills reverberated again with the echoes.

Carrie clung trembling to the arm of her lover, as if affrighted at their rough welcome. The outlaw chief divined her wish, and motioning silence, said:

"There, my men, that will do. Stand aside and we will enter. I wish to show my friend the house."

Obediently the rude men fell back, and with a native delicacy that told of a soft spot yet unseared by crime far down in their hearts, uncovered their heads as the young couple passed. Many were the glances of respectful admiration that the fair young maiden received as she glided along.

"You see, Carrie—there are our quarters. How do you like them?"

"But these weapons; really you-that is-" and then she faltered as her eyes roved over the array of fire-arms and cutlery that was suspended against the walls or were standing in the corners.

"They are the implements of our craft, jet," said Ca; tain Hit, with a hard, metallic laugh. "But we do not use them wantenly. Only when forced to it."

"It is rougher here than I thought. Are the only rooms ?". ....

"Except the loft, up-stairs. But do not fear that I will ask you to share such quarters as there. If you con out to my plans, we will have a nice little cottage built out youder in the grove, where you will not be disturbed, and yet be near charach for us to guard you ardingt all downer," and the outlaw chief gazed down upon the flushed and bil ht fa c with a look of ardent love.

"Well, that we'll e an improvement, but we can saile all such matters bereafter. For now that I am well again, I intend to take drift exercise, and we-that is -"

"Yes," laughed Captain Kit. "I need exercise, also, at I need exercise, at I

"You are a wizard, Kirtt," percel Carrie, and then their units law is a rear out in joyous laughter, sounding strangly misi al an il more rule surroun lin s.

"Br. Knk, what is youder door? There is no room

ti. re-desiregen out upon the hill-ille?"

"Ntexally; but it if. That leads to our materious plant misses had been I will show you," and igniting a lamp, he opened the heavy door.

Carriel and red a little cry of wendering surprise as sleen; well as adjudy-lighted place, and slew the manarous pults of ages turn if up a them, gleaning like twin sters. But them a shrill neigh that sound I strange and uncartady, told her what they were.

"You see, Carde, this is our gold raint. It is an easier not a lot enriching one's self, at any rate, if not quite so rapid."

"Then these horses are-?"

Solm, as some would call it; we say experient. We sat off a let list night. There came in just be firedly. You see we have a kind of way station here, to help soll animals as are brought from above. Then we sail that in to the next station, where they are served the sime, as less on until they reach a market. Thus at day we are all at home. That is why we are so often called "Night-Hawks."

wall; the one heretofore alluded to a proper in the second

Well you as all one. We kep it for such of our file is a way to the day to leave exposed to the day of freelm." In it is he give vent to that hard, metalled in it, it is a like to shiver.

" Is there any one in it now?"

.. No. It has here been used. Come, and I will show - you it."

Unlocking the door, Captain Kit threw it open, holding his light so that the interior was visible. The walls, floor and roof was all of rock, neatly joined and fitted together.

At one end was a rude bench of rough-hewn wood, and above was suspended from a huge staple a heavy iron chain. A more cheerless cell could scarcely be conceived.

"Come, Kirk, let us go. It gives me the herrors in here. Besides, I must be going home. Father will be anxious, and I do not wish him to suspect my having come here."

"Very well; but first, promise to meet me to-merrow where you did to-day. Will you?"

"Yes, I will come. But will you call on father firet, or after?"

"First. I save the best until the last, you see. But come then. It is damp here, and you are not fairly recovered yet."

With a few more words Carrie was scated safely in the saddle and conducted by the outlaw chief to a point beyond view of the building. Then, with one last kiss, he stood and watched her graceful form as she rode rapidly away.

CHAPTER VIII.

A FIENDISH DEED.

As Captain Kit turned toward the house, with a low sigh, he was confronted by Old Mose and Rattlesnake Bob. With a frown—for he evidently did not fancy either of the worthles over highly, he demanded:

" Well, what is it you want?"

"A leetle matter o' business, cap'n," respectfully answered Mose. "Bout old Josh Crane, ye know."

"Well, what is it? Has be returned yet?" easerly asked the outlaw chief, his eyes the hing, as he remembered the yet unavenged death of his friend and comrade, Red Hirble.

"Yas, he hes. He got back a bit sence. An' as some o' us boys hes got a old grudge ag'in' him, back o' his killin' the leftenant, I made bold to ax you would you let us pay the imp a frien by visit to night, so's to sattle all sceres."

"You mean to kill him?"

"Wal, yes, it mought came to that of you sifted it down purty clas. He's a dangerous feller to have so near around us. Than's not like what devilment he ain't up to. If he's amind to do it, he could raise enough boys from round the kentry to wipe us out like nothin'. I half b'lieve that is what he's hingone so long for now," craftily added Mose.

" You think so?"

"I do, housest. But how is it? Shall I take the boys an' call on him?"

"Well, yes, I don't know but you had better I had intend by it him with my own hand, but it will amount to the same thing. You can go to-night; but bring him here alive if you can. If not, make a clean job of it. As you say, him a don't reas mighbor," slowly replied Captain Kit; but with an anxious look upon his face that told his mind was ill at each.

"All right. We'll settle with him, then, one way or anclier, to-right. Kin I pick my men, cap n ?"

"Yes; take who you please. He'll most likely make a plant of it. But bright him here if you can," and then the trop at let two courser rullians with devilish give important lap a their count nances.

At an hear dise, a little party on foot silently glided away from the hill retreat. They numbered some half a day a and and it them were Old More, Rattlesnake Bob, It aring Sam, and their meet intimate compales; as vile a one a last could be picked from the off scourings of the world.

It is at full of the nomber cherished a grudge against the strip is river, and would will bely have satisfied it long sit the least of the down from an ambush, only for the will be dress the entrained of his strong arm and ready the T. It full in inflicing a nortal blow, their own facts to 11 to 11 to 11.

It we struct that have thought they were hunting to defined for, whom they knew would offer no resistance.

In a short time the Night-Hawks came in view of the little cabin, and paused as if in doubt. The hut looked gloomy and deserted.

- "How is it, Mose?" asked one of the men. "Shore ye ain't mistook?"
- "Shore? Yes, in course I am. Leastways he warn't thar'this mornin'. I don't think he's got back yit."
  - "But he may-"
- "Wal, we kin find out. I reckon that's enough on us hyar to han'le the cuss of he is that'."
- "You talk big, Mose, but you'd be the fust one to run; jest as you did t'other time," muttered the outlaw, with a dissatisfied air.
- "Shet trap, Foxy!" angrily responded the leader, evidently little relishing the truth contained in his comrade's words. "We must see it out, anyhow."
- "Wal, of he is thar', I tell you all afore hand that I'm goin' to take the back track, now you have me?"
- "Do as you please. It'll be a nice yarn to tell the hoys," chuckled Mose.
- "You won't be able to tell it, onless you do the same thing. He's a devil, that Josh Crane is," carnestly affirmed Poxy Jake, as he slowly followed his comrade's lead.
- "Now look hyar," said Mose, as they again paused, this time under shelter of a dense clump of bashes, something to the right of the house. "We must find out of the old out is at home afore we show our hands. We'll all go up together an' I'll knock an' ax for Josh. If he comes, why then I'll tell a lie an' slip out o' it as best I kin. You fell rakin watch yer chaince an' plug him, of so be you kin do it Understand?"
- "Yes. So fur. But of only the old woman is thar'?" asked Roaring Sam.
- "Wal, then we'll make a clean sweep o' the hull thing.
  It'll hart old Josh a heap si let worse'n ef we'ld hilled him, hi alt. He thinks a powerful si ht o' the all wanta, o they say."

In truth this latter deed was just what the Night-Hawks had sallied out to accomplish. Old Mose had found that Josh Crane was absent from home, and thinking he saw a chance to deal a bitter blow at his enemy without much danger to hims If, he had induced some kindred spirits to enter into the project, which they were only too eager to do.

Their request of Captain Kit was but a blind. Had they believed Crane was at home, not one of the wretches would have volunteered for the task.

"The Cap'n 'll be rip-roarin' when he hears what we've did."

"B.h! I are that to me. I'll fix it up all right. We'll i'm the house an' say that Crane went with it, or clse run away. But welk straight now, an' keep yer we'pons ready for up. If I opens the door, shoot the imp. Be in a larry, to, or be'll make it warm for us," continued Mose, as he I the way toward the closed door of the shanty.

Not one of the party-although under ordinary circumstances they were bold and daring enough-felt entirely at our as they marched up to the cabin. Josh Crane was a terror to them.

The hand of Old Mose trembled as he lifted it and struck a vice rais rap upon the door of roughly hewn puncheons. A value was hand in reply, the voice of old Mrs. Crane.

"What ye want?"

Problem We want to see the old man a bit, of he's to be see it is a like I Mose, trying to disguise his voice; but in this has early partially successful.

"What you want o' him?"

"Billings, manni; "bout them pesky fellers as hev squattol that' by the hill. We're in a horry, too. Is Crane in that'?"

"No, he ain't to hum, an' I reckon it's all the better for you that he ain't, Old Mose. A mighty heap o' biz'ness you not have with him! You'd better go back to thim as a sat you. You wen't git nothin' here to night," hellly replied the old woman.

"You won't open the door, then?"

"No-I won't!"

Then, boys, le's he's he's it it. You see I teld you right.

It think hyar!' explainly all daths depended; and not until the add the woman realize the peril she had precipitated upon herself, in part, at least.

"Hyer's a stick the old coon hauled fer back logs," cried Rattlesnake Bob. "It'll do. We'll hev the door down in a hurry now. Catch hold an' give us a lift."

The Night-Hawks lifted the trimmed trunk of a small tree in their sturdy arms, and then pointing the jagged butt toward the door, started upon a run, with a wild hurral of triumph. They anticipated no resistance; their revenge seemed assured them.

With a loud thud the log struck the stout door, shaking the entire house to its foundations. But there was a more terrible sound mingled with its clangor.

A blaze of lurid light spouted from the side of the cabin; a leaden bullet sped upon its mission of death, settling in the brain of Bob Rattlesnake. With a wild cry of death agony the doomed Night-Hawk threw up his arms and staggered back, falling to the ground a dead man.

"Thar—how do ye like that, you cowardly imps you? Come botherin' round me some more, won't ye? Now git—travel, or I'll surve the hull b'ilin' on ye in the same way as I did that carr'on!" cried the old woman, in a defiant tone.

The Night-Hawks dropped the log and stood for a moment as if petrified at this sudden calamity. Then they believed that Josh Crane was hidden in the cabin, and smitten with a sudden fear, they turned and fled in dismay.

But this did not last long. The voice of the woman still rung in their cars, and they believed that she was alone, as soon as they paused to reflect. Had Crane been there, he would have charged them at once.

"Boys, Rattlesnake is gone under. Shall we let thet cussed old 'oman boast o' whippin' us all? I move le's go back an' fininish up the job," cried Mose, as they all crouched under cover.

" You don't think he's thar', then ?" ad led Foxy Jake.

"No. Ef he hed 'a' bin, he'd 'a' follered us as soon as he shot. Besides, he'd 'a' given us more than one pill. Come, le's go back."

The party, reassured, followed the Night-Hawk's lead, and they ran swiftly back to where lay the log. Another shot greeted them, but it only slightly wounded Mose, rendering him fairly wild with rage.

Then the log was hurled again and again against the door'that so a began to yield, cracking and splintering. Then it was clashed from its hirges and hurled half-way across the room.

More stimbled through the aperture, almost overthrowing the cld woman, who had leveled her recharged weapon. But for the stimble, he would have received the ritle's contents; as it was he excaped by a slight burn along the check, scorched by the flash.

But it was the last effort of the doomed woman.

S viral lend reports rung out, whose brilliant blaze filled the roim, and she sunk down, still cloping in her hand the ritle that had proven so faithful, stricken unto death.

Then ensue I a fearful scene of barbarity. The surviving desperal as, mad bared by their less, when they had anticipated an easy victory, wreaked their rage and fury upon the senseless corpse.

Old Mos, thally desisting, called his men off to plunder the calin of such articles as attracted their fancy. Then the farniture was broken and piled up in the center of the room, ait r which a blazing brand was applied to it.

Then leaving the doomed cabin, the Night-Hawks stood around watching the scene of destruction with laughs and jeers of demondre give. Slowly at first, then gaining power with every month of the blaze crept on until the entire structure was wrapped in flames.

Not until then did the Night-Hawks pick up their dead and si why have the scene of their diabolical crime.

They ferred to linger lenger lest the glare should call some of the neighbors to the spot, and they should thus be recognized.

CHAPTER IX. MOTHER AND SON.

A Fuw minutes after the Night-Hawks, led by Old Mose, sallied forth upon their flendish mission, Captain Kit also left the Nest, on foot, but there ighly armed, as customary. There was an undecided look up in his bold, hand once countenance, revealed by the moon's bright rays, as the broad brimmed hat was pushed back from his brow.

"Yes, I will do it. I must know what to expect to-morrow. If he should remain stubborn, I must have some way of en to grant him a little longer grace, without seeming to go wholly against my word. And then—I may see Carrie, my angel—my little true hearted girl!" he muttered, with a rapid glance toward the gloomy den.

Then, as if all doubts were settled, he strode swiftly away toward Judge Pierson's ranche. In a few minutes he came in sight of the house, that was not yet lighted up, although the doors and windows were all thrown open.

As though feeling perfectly at home, Captain Kit strole lightly up to the veranly, where several persons were sitting. Two of the number arose and entered the house. One the outlaw knew to be Carrie; the other he believed was Mrs. Pierson, although not sure, as she was an invalid, and mostly confined to her room.

The sattler pecred cautiously at his visitor, and then reconnicing him, ar se with a haughty air, leming upon the back of his chair. His voice as he spoke was subduct, yet cold and firm:

"To what am I in lebted for this visit? I believe the time designated has not yet arrived."

"Not until to morrow morning, 'tis true, but what are a few hours?" rejoined Captain Kit, in an even tone. "I come here to learn what answer I am likely to receive to-morrow?"

"And I can not tell you. Or, if you like it better, I will not tell you, until the last moment of grace has expired," firmly replied Pierson.

'It is show to a caryon do so; but befor we go firther, prings to wall the better to seek a spot a little more I likel. Shad we wask? I have private news for your car alone."

"No, we will go to my room. We are safe there from any caves hopper. I will listen to you because I also have something to tell-or rather show you-in return."

Captain Kit gazed at the settler keeply, but could read no in lex to his thoughts upon that immobile face. Evidently the putter was proparing for the crisis.

The conversation that ensued we need not detail, as it was in the area the shares had transpired at their previous discosion. But then Judge Pierson said.

" By the way, captain, I have a little surprise for you. An cll friend, who is very anxious to see you. Shall I ring?"

"As cell friend?" celled the outliw, one hand mechanically fall ag to the batt of his ready revolver, while his eyes dwill kindy by a the compact features of the settler.

"Yes Shall I ring ?"

"If you please. But - wait a moment. I know you-and I juliza von know me. If not, you should. I am here alone, to minute the large lef instructions behind me. You have a livie mark of miles there upon your face. Should you conterpl. e treachery, remember that I am tolerably quick on the trier. An inch lower and to the left of that spot, wouldunderstand?"

"Ita! what at I for your threats? If you fear, however I will be a said for this portal, so served Pier an.

"Frat! I I at an what that would means. Ring the I II. I was more this my teriors friend," and turning. Captain Kit faced the door.

in the first the first transfer indicating the section to Woman entered.

- I at all to it is it in although considerably In the the same dressed in plain but neat Chila, and her face, the right bearing the imprints of time's fing 13, was still remarkably comely.

As these two, the woman and Captain Kit, stood gazing at each o her, the most casual observer would have been struck by the liken is between them. Then Judge Pler in poles:

"('un in, you do not . d'ite vour fri n l."

"Hower," said the cutlew leader, not noticing the ettler's words, "why are you here—what have you come for?"

"To see my son, since he would not return to me. But I did not think to find you like this, George. It was sail news for a mother's heart," brokeniy replied the woman, evidently yearning to rush forward and class him to her heart, yet deterred by the harsh, forbidding look resting upon his features.

"Your coming here does not mend the matter any. But you, Judge Pierson, what do you expect to gain by this move? How will it better pou!" he added with illy-suppressed ire.

"Perhaps much-perhaps nothing. Madame, your promise?"

"Shall be kept. George, I ask you to abandon this wicked plan of yours. These people have never injured you. Then give over your scheme and come home with me. Will you do it?"

" No, I will not. I have tried an honest life until I am tired of it. As Kirk Dalton I drove and herded cattle for a dog's wages; but do you think it was because I like I the life? No. There were other charms here. I loved Carrie Pi roon, and to win her I did this. Had you, judge, treated me as a man, I would never have dropped the mask. But you did not You in-ulted me, because I, a poor vaguero, as you thought, dared to love your child. Then I swere she should be mine, despite you and your threats. I could have taken her then. She would have fled with me had I but said the word. I did not say it, because I resolved to be revenired upon you first. A: I I say now, what I said then; that if you fail to accelto my terms to rare w, I will keep my word. I will samp Note that yours from the face of the carb; all late of will be me my bride, and on a cf my band," trianglerally cried Captain Kit.

i.e. and called mother. "You must not soil your hands with his blood—he is your—".

"My what?"

" Four uncle!" faltered the woman, bowing her herd upon her hands as if in shame.

For a m. m at the outlaw stood as if petrified. Then the old reclices look returned, and he spake in a low but scornful tone.

"S :- that is the ruse you have adopted, is it, my good sir? Truly I must compliment you upon your astuteness. Yours is a very fertile brain; but while about it, why did not you upon your son? That would have been still more melodramatic."

"George, do not speak so. I can not bear it. I would to a this great sin. As God hears me, he is your uncle—you at the san of his brother. I swear it by my love for you, my only child."

Captain Kit.

"Oh, Gerry, have pity! Say you will about on this, and let is return home where we may be as happy as we were bif rely a were led into evil ways," pleaded the woman, we plant litterly.

"It same that I came fairly by my evil ways, as you call than. I am his m—yet do not bear his none. The puzzle can be real in become way. Is it the right way?"

"Yes!" desperately cried the woman. "Since you force no to it, I will tell you all.—You are his son—and mine—but I was rever his wife. These are your hindred—do not have their destruction upon your head."

"Your very feelibly, teo. His family has degraded I had but return the compliment. If I hesitated to it, I will but return the compliment. If I hesitated to it. I will be to it in any an ver. Let it it family, or by all the it is I will make my each read. Before this time to harrow higher I will have a bridge-nay band a queen!"

Pierson, as he arose.

"Na; I had because them, and I make you, they have great with the Only-unfaturately for god-it rests in how ng side of the balance. It declies you feel But adios until to-morrow. May pleasant dreams attend you—ha! ha!" mockingly laughed Captain Kit, as he backed from the room.

Judge Pierson stood in the doorway, his head bent as if listening in ently, an eager look of expectancy upon his features. Then a peculiar smile flitted athwart his countenance.

He heard the tones of loud voices from the garden. Then a hoarse cry—a pistol-shot—followed by the sounds as of a confused struggle.

Then for a moment all was still.

CHAPTER X.

OLD MOSE'S REWARD.

An hour later a dark form left the grounds of the Pierson ranche, and took up its way toward the Night-Hawks' nest. During that period the tragedy at the old hunter's cabin had been accomplished.

A faint glow still marked the spot, but that was fast dying out. More than one anxious glance did the man cast toward this point, and twice he half-paused as if he would have turned his steps in that direction; but then with a muttered sentence he resumed his way.

His long, swinging strides speedily brought him to the hills, and then he uttered the peculiar signal used to denote the approach of one of the band; the shall, screecking whose of a night-hawk. A small slide was o end in the door and a voice sounded through the aperture:

- " Who is it?"
- "I-the captain. Open and let me in," was the reply.
- "All right," and then the door sating open to admit the new comer, being closed and barred belief him.
- "Why, cap'n, you're hurt! What's happined?" exclaimed the door-keeper, as he gazed at the chief, whose head was rubly bound up with a blood-stained cloth.

"A scratch; that's all. I called at Pierson's ranche, and a I was beging I had a little turn-up with one of his men. The I is a nath a fair suspended, but a little too high if was best of it, the tah," and the outlaw chief attend at the cut-are the circumstance and are the continuent.

"You settled him, then?"

" There'll be a funeral at the ranche to-morrow."

"But how is it, captain?" asked another, who had drawn near during the conversation, Martin Homer, the litutenant Rel Hirble's death. "How will it go to-morrow? With Pierson, I mean?"

I har hy harow. The fool is stubborn yet, and swears it it half receive us at his pisted muzzle. But I don't better him. We will give him a call to morrow as promited, and when he finds that we are board to keep our word, he'll znuckle under."

"And the girl-Miss Carrie?"

"As you know. Showill keep her word, too. When I be to will show in come to me. You heard what she will here that hay? that shows it like to be queen of a band of should have that this ail dr should be obeyed as much so I am. How do you like the idea?"

What reply Hower would have made is not known. Just at the tract and the voice of Old Mose replied.

To der-keep runtered a cry of surprise as he glanced out, at the signt like that has eyes, revealed by the broad blaze of

In North arms I have a line believed by the believed to the believed to be the believed to be the believed. Then be a line is a line of the believed. Then be in the problem is a line of the believed.

The masses of the second problem of the seco

"Well, sir, what describes this mean?" demanded Captain Kit, after a brief silence, modeling toward the dead bodies.

- "He did it," muttered old Mose, his eyes quailing before the stern glance of his chief
  - "He's Whe is has"
  - "You spon-the fill a very sent us n'ter-e'l Come"
- can't trust you, else, Old Mose." But go can. Tell it all, and be can't trust you, else, Old Mose."
- "Wal —we went that —as you tell us too, an' fust thing we knowed he shot at us, an' dropped Bob, yonder."
- "What—without speaking? Didn't he ask you who you were and what you wanted?" su-picioully demanded Captain Kit.
- "No, he didn't—Il h't say a durned word, but jist blazed away. Then we went for the colin with a log o' word, an' ba'st open the door. As it went down, so did Rearin' Sam; he placed him. Wal, we pulled trigger, too, an' the critter fell, 'thout a word."
  - " You killed him-Crane?"
  - " No we didn't, nutber," muttere! Mose, uncasily.
  - " But you said-"
  - " That the fell r went under, but 'twasn't him."
- "Who then? Come, speak out! Don't mouth your words so."
- "Wil, then--'twasn't our fault. We thought 'twas him, or we wouldn't 'a' shot. Who'd 'a' thunk a woman 'd 'a' acted so f'erce-like?"
  - " A woman?"
  - "Yes-'twas the old man's wife. She-"
- "What! You tilled her—Mrs. Crane?" cried Captain Hit, in a tone of horror, one hand nervously finaction a pit ibutt.
- Therefore field, a Louis afore. The poly to be a given in the last of all the poly to be a given by the poly to be a superior of all the contract of all the contract
- "Mer Carr, I believe you lie. You en too him, owned to him, to the him to have to whom you the hid Jon Cran. You have he with him and he had be not been would be about a storage to you have the opt common would be about, and put up this job to get even with him; you and the cowardly dogs who went with you."

"Then's rough worls, cap'n, to speak to a feller what went by your criers; durned rough! Thin't right, of you is the first in his trackers."

Eyes, as one hand glided slowly to his belt.

The Man what is your opinion? Are we to turn an arrivers? How we can to so low a pass as that? I have always found you were with him in this car is are covardly, much ring dega, for whom a mais being a few are with me?

As 1. gimed around the crowd assembled, Captain Kit was greated with a load cheer of approval by the majority. But there were near a disententies who remained silent, with sullen looks.

Oil Maralso noted this, and made a pardiar grante to them. As if understanding the signal, they began working around together.

It is well. I expected as much, from men. And now, Mark Carter, yet and year compades in this act, deliver up your weapons and surrender."

"What fir?" sall mly demand of the outlaw.

The Las, we will look upon it as a mistake on your part, and everlak it. Come-do you hear?"

" Yas-I hear."

"Then cley. What! You won't?" his ed Captain Kit, as the outlaw whipped out his revolver. "Drep that—drop it, I say, or I'd and you to the devil, your master!"

" Complete Per, and tell him For receipt I's smalled Marc.

as he threw up his weapon and fired.

the pistol's muzzle to it.

in the way his right orm. A quick then fill in a line in the fill heavily to the interest and it is a line in the interest and it is Manualis the others had not been idle. Pony Jake and Lie committee were joined by these whose veices had been silent at the appeal of Captain Kit, and drawing their revolvers, stood upon the defensive.

As the last stragged and fell, his adherent, led by Homer, rashed upon those who stood up for More. For a harf minute, hereide yells and eaths, mingled with the class of tell and ringing pistol-shots filled the room.

Then the voice of the chief rung out, clear and distinct above the din:

"Hold! not another blow! The man who disobeys, I will shoot like I did this dog! Pat up your weapons."

However promptly obeyed, and as the smoke cleared away, the result of the conflict was perceptible. Besides Old Mose, Foxy Jake and four of his friends lay dead or dying upon the floor, while not one but bore marks evidencing the deadly ferocity of the brief strife.

Of the other party, three had fallen; Captain Kit cscaping with only a scorched face, as by a miracle. Mose had the I too quick for him, and his bullet only left a discolored welt along the chieftain's cheek.

"Captain, what shall we do with the dogs?" asked Homer, brashing aside the block that trickled over his eyes from a ghastly cut upon the head.

Bind them and put them in the 'jug.' There's room if they lie close. We won't have time to try them until after this job for to-morrow. We must make an example of some of them then, though, or the league may as well break up first as last. Such actions would ruin any organization. But take them out, and then come here."

Captain Kit sunk into a chair, and quietly began reloading his pistel. Depite its disformation by the treachers a locality his tare were a possible book; one that appear dock attention triumphant.

As the martiners were bound— ne siver cirkt in and ler—a followed the purpy to the vault, and saw them sately lake I wathin the cell, taking charactef the key landif.

Then look aim Honor aside, he spake in a low, reason tone:

"Well, that is a good job over. Mose and some of the rest had been a drawback long enough. I'm glad we've got rid of them so hand by. But you are hurt, my friend?"

"A little—but it den't matter. The boys used to swear that Mut H mur was proof against both steel and lead, but this will be the real of L and the limit munt.

"Well, Henry, I was about to speak about our job for tonorm. We must take the soldie early—about deplicht.
Willy as to gettion them mody? That is, the time and what they may expect if Pierson holds out stallborn. There'il bell of his as if he refered my terms."

"Are year in extrest about their; this? I mean burning him out if he don't knuckle down."

"In leaf am; never more so. I don't like to give up leat, and whatever I've said, I'll do, if man can accomplish it. But now, you understand?"

"Yes. All will be ready by day dawn. But you will be here?"

a little wilk in the night air, to cool my brain. Two pistols fired at arms longth in one's face, inside of an hour, are not the rest of the night?"

"Why, Steve Hardress. You remember you appointed him."

"Ye —I forgot. Well, you had best go and have some one into your head. It may cause you trouble if neglet 1," on has he specie that, Captain Kit turned and left that all ling, continuing Hardres to keep a close guard, and he really to that him when he returned; greatly to the surprise of that worths, who prid d himself upon the high opining the chief had early that of him.

With a quick gian of a multhim, Captain Kit hastened to-view amid its dense shadows.

CHAPTER XI.

JOSH CRANE STRIKES FOR VENGEANCE.

THE eastern horizon was faintly streaked with gray ere the outlaw chi fireturned to the nest, and being admitted, he flung himself wearily upon a bench, and bowing his head upon the table, appeared but in deep thought. He did not answer until Hower touched him lightly upon the shoulder; then his face showed ghastly while in the lamplicht.

" My Gel! captain, you are sick! What is the matter?"

"No, I have only been thinking. It is a momentous day to me, Homer, this one. It will either make or break new If I fail now, I believe I would hill myself?"

"Is it so bad, captain? I knew you were smitten with the laly, but lish't know it had gone so deep."

If I street, she is min--mine whelf and edirely! If I fail, you will be advanced yet and her step, my friend," and Captain Kit smile I a peculiar smile, sail, yet modiling.

"Why spock of failing?" If we can not work your will by for makes, then we will by foul. You do not think Piers in will be foolish enough to reit, do you?"

"I don't know what to think. But I feel as urel that something mementous is about to occur. It came to me as I by here, and I can not banish the belief. But never mind that now. Are the men ready?"

"Yes. It only needs your signal to set them gring."

"Give it, then, Hemer, and have my horse brought here. I am not myself to-day."

at the eith fereboller, and heir from now you will heigh

"Or che you will foll as I do. But let it p.... Time illes and we make that keep the July waiting. I am anxious for the end."

the weak, the Listing In that, and then, but by Capain But, they rose off at a rapid trot toward the Presentation.

The majority of the men were in high older, in anticipation of plant in a large large haping that their intended pray would be ally prove of that, and thus force their chief to release his word.

At least they neared the ranche, and to their discust, from his open and just as used. Evidently there would be no recision to on the part of Pierson that day, the he would have a lattern with this dank barred doors.

very Wife v. I. I. All will be plain salling to-day."

"It rouly so us so. But for all that, there may be a trap hill not a much this apparance of quetale. He is a stublent, houghly man, and horsely one to submit so tamely. But we will so. Stip the man now. They can hear all that is soil, only that he so close as to some bullying. I will find out how the ground lies."

Described, Capthickle differently walked up to the value, where the tall form of the either row appeared, Lawez appeared, he are to have the ringle; transposing father. The oursewords, after a slight not, spoke, his values or hard are likely the benefit of his men.

day this is?"

"You have realized me of it, often enough, at any rate," all to realize the recent of the list durk eyes.

Vry will, then. It will save the trouble of recapitulation. You have what I have come for, then, and also what the arrest to a Your November 1.

would be the consequence?"

-alpha of particles find with corresponding to the particles, with the limit of a large and the large and large and the large and large and gar a fact the part of a

"No-except the chance I have already offered. Give me your daughter Carrie, and all will be well. And be quick with your answer. I am getting impatient."

"Will you take her answer?"

"Yes, I will—glally!" instantly replied Captain Kit. "Boys," he added, turning to the Night-Hawks, "he asks us to accept the decision of his daughter—the one whom you saw the other day. Shall we do it?"

"Yes-yes!" was the general reply, following Homer's voice.

"You hear," and Captain Kit smiled as he turned again to the settler. "They consent. Her will shall be law to us,"

Pierson did not reply, but stepping to the door, call d for Carrie. As though expecting the summons, the fair maiden made her appearance, and stood beside her father, her large, lufrous eyes resting shyly upon the face of the outlaw chief.

"Daughter," said Pierson, taking Carrie's hand in his and pressing it re-a suringly, "I would have spared you this trial, could I have done so. But now you must speak. The fate of us al.—our life or death—lies in your hands. But answer truthfully the questions I ask you. First—do yo love this man?"

" For," was the faintly-murmured reply, as she cot another shy glance at the radiant face of the outlaw chickan, who sprung forward, seemingly oblivious of the fact that fully two score pair of eyes were curiously watching him, and clasping Carrie to his breast, rained passionate kinses down upon her lips.

A low, chu kling murmur ran through the flock of Night-Hawks, but this was checked by a peremptory word from Honer. Pierson bit his lips and his face flushed, while his eyes glittered curiously.

"There—there, I believe that will do. I haven't a foot left to stand on. Carrie, I am astonished at you!" at length said the judge.

"Why I-I couldn't help it, father. He is so big and strong," murmured the mail n, shrinking behind her parent, from the curious gaze of the outlaws.

"Will, then, I suppose it is all satisfic terrily, execut when I am to chi a my fair bridg" as led Captain Kit, joyously; and yet his manner was not devoid of a certain tinge of anxiety.

"She shall answer that, also."

"Well, then—if I must—one week from to-day," faltered Carrie.

" You har, captain? Is it satisfactory?"

"A we k carlier would have pleased me better, but I sup-

"Very well, and now to confirm our new relations, we must drink the health of the bride and bridegroom," cried Judge Pierson, who appeared strangely excited. "Come with me, captain, and we will find something to do the honors with. I have some pure 'corn juice' here that I can honestly recommend. Tell your men to wait."

This speech was greeted with hearty cheers by the Night-Hawks, and then the two men entered the house. In a few mire, to sthey return I, followed by servants bearing goards, juzs, at I I othern flasks, filled with the fiery home-made whisky, with deer-horn caps and smaller goards for drinking utensils.

Then each men filled a hearty draught, drinking the health of the couple so strangely bethrothed, with stentorian yells a lich are. Then, after a few whispered words to Carrie, Cartin Kit returned to his horse, and dashed off at the head of his men, taking the rock to the lower ford.

"I thought you were going back to the nest, explain?" said Il and r. "You know you promised to send some men to-day up to Claffine's."

I wis a to get the first off. We must try those fellows to-day. I wis a to get by Cran is cabin to see what can be learned about the affair. There must be no mistake."

"Paring t would be best. But are you in earnest about punishing them—with death?"

"If the light and It must be done for our own cool. The learn we did not exist six months, unless there was a me semilion of his and crimaintained. You know that y use if."

or Yes, I agree with you there. But, captain, it will make true. I for us. I have heard the boys—that is, a good many of the new test there has been exactly panished ut. If you press it, there will be another mutiny."

"So be it, then! The sooner all such scoundiels are wooded of from the back better for such as have some decency left. You will stand by me, of come?"

"Yes. You can count upon me. There will only be about a dozen whem you need fear. It is a pity that Bogurth is off with his men. They would uplob I you in every thing. But we can count on two to their one, as it is."

"I hape we can get along without any trouble. We will try, anyhow."

The party were now rilling done near the spot where had exerced the conflict detailed in chapter second. At the foot of the little rise, this read wound through a patch of quite dense underbrush and young live-ordes.

Crossing the Lill, the Night-Hawks rode slowly into this place, unsuspecting any danger, chatting idly over the scene witnessed at the Pier on ranche. But they were doomed to a startling awakening.

A loud cry are red them from their sence of recurity. And then it a small as the agh the woods before, behind and upon either side of them, were one mass of the.

A fearf it voltage of ritle balls was porred into their crowded ranks, with a deadly effect. Over one half of the entire number fell dead in their tracks, while these who escaped a wound, were the exceptions.

Then came the quick, spiteful cracking of revolvers, as with wild yells, a score of mounted men sprung from ambush, rushing to close querters. An Hercub an form led them, a pistol in either lead, his a tur lly placid features horribly distorted, his eyes burning like the e of a mad bened wild beast.

It was Josh Crane, striking for vengennee! Each blow was dealt with deable for eas he thought of his murdered wife. He seemed a devil—not a man.

Homer and Captain Kit had been more down at the first Circlarge, side by side. Without a leader, the Night-Hawks did not think of redistance, although nearly equal in numbers to their focs.

Described, they only thought of flight. Once within their net, they could bid defiance to whatever force might be brought as dust them, until the rest of the band returned to their relief.

For a time this attempt was unsuccessful. Hommed in, the outlaws for a despirably, striving to cut their way to it is a problem of the contract of the contrac

The control of the control of the line of the control of the contr

Their is as half been chosen for speed and endurance, so essential to steeps in their calling, and fresh, easily carried their nesters beyond reach of the settlers. Nearly a dezen in all reach it the nest, and were a limited by Hardress, who half we half need by the continuous sounds of firing.

As they ented the building and secured it for deferse, the property of the entire remarkable to the entire remarkable to as I could be the limited through the forlows curses and angry oaths of rage and pain.

ing his least and fell to the floor.

Described as way. Hank Pellor," an crity cried Hardres in a life field to place to heavy hand upon the place to heavy hand the heavy hand heavy

However label only as the man sunk back upon the floor, a trace read in his fatures and a rattle in his throat. One great, page 20, and he was dead!

CHAPTER XII.

CAPTAIN MIT AND HE DOUBLE.

The ly decide of the total line is for a line is the late of the late of the late of the factives, the late of the factives of the factives of the late of the lat lected stations just without rifle range, apparently resolved to starve the outlaws out.

Believing this to be their purpose, the latter were not inclined to force hostilities. Every hour gained thus was unother chance for safety. The squad under command of Bogar hands soon return, and then they would wreak a bloody revenge upon the settlers.

An hour after sunset a voice uttered the regular signal, and peering forth, Steve Hardress recognized the form and features of his captain. With a glad cry of joy he opened the door and admitted the outlaw chief.

That worthy had one arm in a sling, and looked rather the worse for wear. He explained his unexpected appearance very satisfactorily.

His horse had received the bullet intended for him, and, falling, had smashed one arm of its rider beneath the saidle, the pain causing the outlaw to faint. But while the settlers were in pursuit of the Night-Hawks, he had crawled off into the bushes, where he remained concealed until nightfall. Then by close creeping he had worked his way through their lines, to rejoin his comrades.

Soon afterward the majority of the outlaws sought rest in slumber, nearly all more or less under the influence of liquor. One of the men who had remained at the nest was detailed as door keeper, the prisoners in the cell all having been freed before Captain Kit's return, so they might do their part toward defending the house against the anticipated attack.

The outlaw chief sat at one of the tables, his head bowed upon his hand, while his face was turned toward the man on daty. That worthy, his senses blunted by his frequent potations through the day and evening, no lied drowsily ever and anon, apparently overcome by sleep. The other Night-Hawks were all within the interior, or the the vault, sleeping upon their arms, really to flock to the defense at a moment's warning should their fears prove true.

Sold ply there came a low, stealthy rap at the door, that cause I the commodent sentry to spring erect, with the customary challenge passing his lips. In answer came the secret password, and then immediately after it the private signal of Captain Kit I

The sentry stood aghast. He gazed first at the door and that it the outlaw chief, who sit with his head still bowed in. It's halfs. Evidently he was unable to comprehend has there outland the lane time.

The him i was repeat I and a low voice added:

"Com-but one in quick! There are a lot of these cused division you ler, and if they get a glimpse of me it will be all up. Open, I say!"

"Open the door and let him in," quietly remarked the out-

There was a product smile upon his face, and a glittering light in his eyes that might not be casily analyzed. One had been unwounted one—fell upon a polished revolver-butt, and so med to be caressing it; more than once it was slightly rated, as if to ascertain whether the scubbard clung to it or not.

The wend ring sentry opened the door a few inches, and then, as an agile form glided through the aperture, it was closed again and hastily barred. The new comer stood in the full three and glare of the rude lamps, his form and features plainly revealed.

A cry trake from the three men, as if involuntarily. The station of grant first open one and then the other, in open medical and the other, in open medical and the first open one and then the other, in open or the last of awake glibbs liften as me dream.

And train it was the generical continue thief, the two menters such a continue to each other. The same family of the complexion; only differing in garb.

And we if the carry cut the resemblance still more complatify, the two man the counterparts of each other, uttered and a with the counterparts of wonder;

" Kirk Dalton!"

The way in the mass the first to collect his wits, and he gill his for the property of the face of the other. There was a hard, stelly after in his eyes, and a cold, at a first part of the intruder.

"You here? You are very kind, Kirk Dalton! I have spect considerable time in searching for you. Now that we have met, we will not part soon."

"True." retorted the new-comer, "we will not part very soon. I agree with you there. But whether this period will be as pleasing as you seem to intimate, remains to be seen."

"Why have you come here? Is life so worthless that you can afford to throw it away in this manner?"

"Ha! ha! that is good, I must acknowledge," laughed the other, surdonically "You talk as though you were some-body. Pray, have you joined the band and been elected as supreme ruler, that you speak so confidently?"

"I have—and you know it."

- "I do mot know it. This band follows one Captain Kit," angrily returned the other.
- "I know it-I am Captain Kit," coolly replied the outlaw chief.

" You-Captain Kit!"

- "I-Captain Kit; yes, sir. Have you any thing to say against it?"
- "Jim," added the new-comer, turning to the sentinel, "Low is this? You know me; which one of us is the captain?"

The door-keeper helplessly began scratching his head, staring from one to the other with an air of ladicrous dismay. His mouth slewly opened and shut, but he did not speak. Evidently the enigna was too intricate for him to solve in his present state of mind.

"Hallo, boys!" cried the second Captain Kit, in a loud tone, his eyes sparkling an rily as he drew his revelver and confront I his coldly smiling anteronist.

And then ease I a sallen change in the tablem. As the heavy tramping of the awak ned outlaws recounded from the inner room, the worm I dechief sprang forward, and with a lightning-like stroke, felled the second chain at of the honorable office to the floor. The heavy revolver-butt in thatly deprived him of sense.

This move was so quickly and almidy in b, that there could be not a that which it. The superior backed the floor.

Then the calef turned toward the confused group which 1.: ljistent rel the room. His volce was char and culm as he spoke:

"There is a medicality on foot, boys. You see this fellow - Kirk Dalam. Well, he came here and pretended he was not, though I don't believe he knew I was here. He was the one who shot my horse to-day. He aimed at my head, and I say; so he thought he'd finished me for good."

"Wint do you think was his object in coming here, captain ?"

"He call have but on ," slowly replied Captain Kit. "Believing me deal he most likely thought he could pass himself of as your lead r, and thus betray you into the hands of the care is there. You see he is very much like meconly he forgot the dress. Why even Jim, yonder, didn't know what to say ween that food a ked him to tell him which was which," large I the Night-Hawk chief; a peculiar hard, but then he was a peculiar man, as the band knew only too well.

"He is like you," a lied the Night-Howk, who had spoken before, in a the glaffal true, "Only for the dress he might easily have desired as, but you been away. He is a dangerous person, and I for one am chalbe is where we can keep our eyes upon him."

"It is Kirk Daism. You all know I have tried hard to get indication before, for I found by would work us some horn, with that for. He would have pass I for me with almost any of the boys, and maight have harned too much for our good, but not were. But he is safe now, and we will see that he remains so. The him, some of you, and put him in the hold. My arm forts me work, but I will go along and see him secure."

The still some is to by was lifted up and conveyed to the large and the second tile and girdle.

In a contain Kit related the door, slipping the key into his own pocket.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE OATH OF THE BORDER.

The reader will remember that when Josh Crane reached the ranche of Julge Pierson on the night he encountered the Night Hawk lieutenant, Red Hirble, a servant told the old hunter that Pierson wished to see him immediately; and also the greeting words of the settler:

" I have great news for you, Crane!"

Truly, a welcome surprise awaited the old hunter, when he entered the library. A tall form sprung forward, and clasping his hands, greeted him warmly.

For a time the scout was fairly dumbfounded. He could scarcely believe his eyes. He was the person whom he had believed he had seen at the nest—Kirk Dalton!

In a few words the seeming mystery was explained, and both men saw they had greatly wronged the young herd-man by their suspicions. They comprehended that there must be another man wondrously like Dalton, who had well-night proved a fatal "double."

Crane listened to a strange and romantic story that will be explained in due time, and then the three friends consulted together and concected a feasible plan for the disconditure of the outlaw band. Each had a part to play, and with the stake at issue there was little likelihood of their failing from lack of energy.

Crane was to secretly depart and collect a number of his old comrades in the recent war for Texan independence. He felt assured that he could gather at least a score; perhaps more.

We have seen how he succeeded, and also at what a fearful scriffee. He returned to find his cabin in a hes, and, within the ruins, the charred bones of his dearly beloved wife.

He was at no loss to account for this deel, and he for another day had passed he knew who were the mindress. Only one of them lived, Rearing Sam, and against him Crane Lai sworn "the eath of the berder." From that moment the Night-Hawk was a doomed man.

They be the wore concerned in the fight heretofore detailed, where the Hawks were so cummingly entrapped, and upon Rearing Sam's heart Josh Crane had drawn a bead. By a now chance—the sudden turning of his horse's head—the outlaw escaped the bullet.

Then he had dashed through the méle, and fled for dear life. The point class n was the weakest, but yet it was in really an expessive direction from the nest; a fatal error on the figitive's part, as he specific malized.

With a house howl of more Crane urged his huge charger through the crowd, and with only thought for the one man, he desired willy after the floring murderer. Roaring Sun health cry, and glane i ever his shoulder. A livid shade that I has a his for the same he noted the avergor upon his track.

He felt that haves doned. What brute courage he noturally partials him new, just when he needed it the most.

He in very life depended upon his doing so, he could not have not the borderer now hand-to hand. He thought only of the at, and knowing the quality of the horse he herein bordered and appars until the tertured animal larger.

will, mallery. He lent forward and gave his horse free rein. The noble creature seemed endowed with wines, so rapilly did be a ever the ground, apparently unconscious of the heavy weight upon his back.

The fully two mains the Ni ht Hawk maintained his vantage, as leven in the 12. But his beat was light built; a chair at a bresh, but he in hettern. His belt was already well night shot.

The black horse thand relich in his rear, as though a nere reacher. Not a hair was turned; not a single drop of sweat as yet stain 1 to glosy blacks of his coat. Joh Crane his was only a cystien of time. He had implicit that in the power of his large. But one other upon to Taxa; paris halle found that could equal him.

The outlaw plied his spurs until the long rowels dripped blood. He cast many a glance over lis shoulder tremblingly. And as he noted the strides of the black horse his heart within him.

He felt that he was doomed. A broad stretch of "rolling prairie" lay before them. Two hours, even at their present rate of speed, would not suffice to cross it.

And yet, in less than that time, his horse would fall dead, if indeed he was not overtaken before. Then he bethought him of his weapons. A lucky shot might disable the huge black or its rider. If so, he would be safe.

Scarce fifty yards now separated the enemics; less than three fourths of what it had been at the start. There was no time to lose. He saw Crane disengage the lasso from the saddle-pommel.

Turning in his saddle, Rearing Sam fired two shots. The tall avenger still sped on, untouched. Again and again the revolver cracked, until the chambers were all empty, and yet nothing was pained by the Night-Hawk. On the centrary a good deal was lost, for unassisted by the reins, the chestnut horse stumbled frequently, and thus lost ground.

Then the long lasso was harled through the air. Rearing Sam flung up his knife arm, but the noese fell over it and his shoulders. Then he was plucked from the saddle and harled violently to the ground.

His horse instantly paused, its head droeping, trembling in every limb. The strain had been too great, and with a feel le neigh, he tottered, recled, and then sunk down, the hot libely gashing from his nostrils. One great quiver, and he was dead.

Crane rode up and dimounted, and bound the cutlaw's holds behind him. Then he sat down and awaited his recovery.

There was no expression upon his face other than that same cold, stony lock that he had worn ever since he had first gazed upon the scene of death and desolation. He see, ed like a galvanized corpse.

Reming Sun specility recovered his senses, and then, without a word, Crane tight red the notes of the haso around no cather's need, and mounting his home, jorked Reming Com-of the old hunter awed him.'

In the or the structure casting a glass blind in the Perceit a baltima, Reading San trotted along basis, i. i. i. the state him at his reck at every basis, i.e.,

The rosts of the testered wietch were herrible as he was draged along through the harsh stubbles and prickly pears. Then, with a desperate effort, he managed to scramble to his feet, black in the face, with blood streaming from his nestribe and from the lacerated thesh.

It was , ich noon when Crane drew rein beside the charred raise of his case cheerful little calin. It was new dreary and children. Reming Sam trembled like a leaf; his teeth charteing to ther his form quivering with vague horrer.

Crim moved about in stern sheree. Evidently his course was fally deal hear. The Night-Hawk could hear it no learn. If ther know the worst at once, then be left in such a criming step enser.

"What'he you go in' to do 'th me, Mister Crane?" he faltered, Listel hardy and dry.

The all lenser did not speak. He went to the little stable and were 1 depoint the time is with his noted hands, though an arrival to at 1 and 1. This corting his commons strength, the happened to afferd him a peculial satisfied in

The timbers were that in a pile, and then selecting one of the street of with the art, and then do we it finally into the ground.

The craves wherehold upon the expressions with a localistic four racking his beart. He could not mitualers and the meaning of these actions.

demned to suffer death by fire!

Helman and the arm of phase sand project for many project but that that the last the

(..., in ...) in partitions have because the land of t

the emplications of the Night-Hawk. And then as the timbers were stacked up around the stake, to which was fastened a long log-chain, Crane turn I toward Rearing Sam.

In his Herculean graup, the burly cutlaw was but a very child, and despite his frantic struct his and kicking, Crane Lell him against the stake and then bound him with the log chain. Though his head was free, the chain wound around his body, held the outlaw upright.

Then Josh Crane spoke to his victim, for the first time since his capture. His voice sounded harsh and strained, very unlike the bold, free tone habitual to him. The blow had changed him fearfully.

- "Sam Hebron, you've bin trung here to make amends as fur as your withless karkidge'll do it, for a black, hellish thing that you did—you an' your pardness. You've cid this," and he ned ted toward the charmed ruins of the little cabin. "An' you must pay fer it, too."

"I didn't---'twan't me," faltered Roaring Sam, his teeth chattering audibly.

"Don't lie—'twon't do you no good; not a smich. I know you did do it; you an' Old Mose, Foxy Jake an' Bob Rattle-snake. Tothers is dead; so'll you be, in a hour from now. I wouldn't 'a' minded it so much of so be you'd 'a' come an' did all this when I was to hum, 'ca'se then it 'd 'a' bin a more even thing. I count myself good for the best hafe a dezent fellers as you kin rake an' scratch up out o' your gang o' cutthroats.

"But you waited ontil I hel gone away. You was afterd to tackle the old man, you was, an' so snaked around ontil he had gone, so's you could aim a lick at him through his old woman. Wal, you mardered her; you an' the rest. They've I all as high price as they was able, for it; now it's parturn.

You see what I'm wish to do 'th you. I'm goin' to have point I've turned your face so't you kin see what' the old obin stood, as over ther', treath the block-jack, is when I ve knowed point that was but o'may pote Hopsy. You him bok than, an' think for what you're a b'm' posished."

" Marcy -- marcy for the love of God, Crane; don't do this!"

grant the cray a wretch, his face livid with fear, and form quivering with agonized terror.

The it, of proceedings of the young for soil as younged. You cain't be it, of proceeding the Young in the slow no marcy to be a larger than the from m. I've sworn that year, it to the double of a dog. I tack the oath o' the border, it, to, so you may as well give up all thoughts o' lite, first as last. But I'll act the white man by ye.

- in the year her any massiles or word to anybody tell
- a tribis, an' I'll do my be t but what they shall her it.

Speak out—is thar' any thin'?"

If to Re! I'm awful wicked. Let me her time to grow her an't at o'my sins, won't ye? Say yes, an' I'll bless per fact—I'll be your ninger an' let you wilk the time till day, of so be you'll on'y spar' my life!"

If I be you live to the to die, but nother be ye fit to live. In I be you live out you pented, you mought be old Methy, him sorp it recided by, as for as are is consumed. No, Romey Sam, your three has come. You've run to the condour length But say a bit o' a prair, of so be you was ever hour. You've for the methy of the live in the length of a prair, of so be you was ever hour. You've you jest ten minutes afore I tech the fire off."

The description of his pleadings, but he might as will have spoken to a stone, as to the man whom had so the rly wrong h. All the love Crane had felt for his man included the companion of his youth as well as in the large of the companion of his youth as well as

The least of the light of the could be seen that the least of the could be seen that the co

The state of the s

The spile we should the disking continued, and has blocked intensity upon the tiny shower of sparks as they descended from the friction. Then one caught upon the piece of pank, and under the breath of the old scoot, it guide bly in which is Then tiny shavings were placed upon the glowing spak, and breathed gently upon until they har tinto chick that they tiny and feeble at this, but fast quicker strongth and possor. Carefully feeding this, Crane he ded not the propers and supplications of his victim.

Then at several points the fire was placed am no the dry mass of timbers, and when it once fairly get und r way, Crane withdrew from the spot, and stood leading upon his ritle, coldly watching the ascending flames, and the distorted features of the ill-fated Night-Hawk, as he writhed convulsively beneath the first pengs of that horrible death.

But we care not to dwell upon this subject. It was too fearful. And yet it was scarcely more than justice.

A fiendish deed had been committed in cold blood. An innocent person—a woman—had been sacrificed to glut a vengeance against one whom the brutal marderers dare not confront in person.

Joshua Crane had received a frontier of scation. His father, mother and only sister had been mardeded by the Indians; he himself had been taken captive and brutally treated through four long years, are he could effect his compe. Two of his sons had been killed by the Mexican guerrilles; a third had been shot from ambush by some cowardly miser et, most probably one of those very men who had dealt him this last deadly blow.

A kinder heart, naturally, never heat in Laman 1 cm, than that of Joshua Crane's. But this calamity had crazed him, or che warped his brain until he was no leager that for the thought only of venounce now, and the call had taken had escaped him—for sacia he remaind a their had be settly had so that the case when his own—he telt it as element of the parties to a case when he held in his power to the state of our taken.

An hear later he will stood in the same pair to be coved upon the fairtly the critic cashes. The part of stood, the heart and charred. To it has a superior chain, a herrible remnant of what had so recently been a strong man, fall of life and spirit.

Then with a long-drawn sigh, the avenger turned away from the spot, heart deltand wenty of exist noe. Only for one this the world have only his life then and there.

Bornail of the accursed Night Hawks was extracted by most live. After that -he cared little what bound him to earth had been severed in the death of his wife.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE NEST RIFLED.

The Night-Hawks did not seem inclined to return to their strators after this startling into truption, but stood around in line had a convering exertly, but in low, subdued tones. If rether one anxious or carious plance was call toward Capter. But, who had received the rade table.

He is always lower upon one hand, and his eyes closed, to the new might have noted the occasional quiver of may led that told he was not above stealing a curious glose toward the mare carnet talkers. But he seemed perform to a carnet talkers. But he seemed perform the acceptance of the seemed performance of the seemed performanc still alphaster hup, saying to the door-keeper, who was still at its last hough endeavoring by still at the ir natural equilibrium after the shock they had undergone:

a lot of the settlers out yonder?"

will be the This law was at the law to y'd

s and the state of the state of with the property of the sound who are the property of the settlers, by those who had escaped from the ambush, had greatly agitated the worthy sen-

"I don't know; but it is easily found out. Who will step out-ill and take a look?" added Captain Kit, glascing around up a the crowd; but no one stepped forward.

Perhaps they objected from principle to expose their tender holies to the probable salute of a leaden bullet, in rely to demonstrate the truth or fallacy of a surmise. The outlaw chief glanced around with a peculiar smile; but then he was a peculiar man. However, it lasted only for a moment; then he spoke in a quick, sharp tone, that told how determined he was in the course he proposed to pursue:

"Very well, then. I don't blame you. But I will go myself. There will be but little danger, for if they are there, I con pass myself off as Kirk Dalton, you know. He is in here. And then I can find out their plans. We must be them off until Bogarth returns with the rest of the boys, when we will have it all our own way. And I promise you, we will make these curse I moddlers sweat tears of blood for this remapers. We will sweep every horn and hoof before us. I swear it?"

Loui cheers followed this speech, and the Night-Hewles seems I reanizated by their leader's spirit. Then he beded an remain out of sight, and keep quiet until his return, hat upon no account to open the door until fully as arred of his identity.

The door opened and he glided forth, preceding directly toward the grove that surrounded the spring. He was obliged to cross a bright, moonlighted space, and evidently trusting in the strong re-emblance, he strode boddy along until he reached the outer trees.

A tall form confronted him, and a voir spoke: the ve. of Josh Crane:

- " Is that you, Kirk "
- "Yes," was the instantiate reply; "it's me."
- " Wal; how does the thing work?"
- "Pholy Carbbit be haver. But I came now cetther into two de. The red Captain Kit made his apparance, and I had to settle him."
  - " You didn't kill him?"

"No-God ferbid! But I have him a safe prisoner.
Now what have you decided upon—what we spoke of?"

"I re", n. Bat yat know lest. You've bin inside.

How is it?"

thin. I can get them to go and lie down again. Then I will state the fellow on watch, and let you in. You can can pick your man, and do the job up as you please; either wip them can at once, or take them prisoners."

"It'll 'm. and to the same in the cend, anyhow, but we will keep 'em to stretch hemp, I reckon. How long 'll it be afore you're ready fer us?"

I can't say. As soon as possible, though, for there is no tilling with the other gang will be along, and if we are ought between two thes, they'll serve us worse than we did that today. I will hold a candle before the loop-hole in the dir when I want you. Then come up and we will note a chan sweep of it," burrielly spoke the onelaw chief.

"All right. But go back now, for some o' the rest

o' the boys."

"I frightened all such ideas out of them," laughingly in a little years man, as he turned and retraced his steps.

As the modified fell upon his face it revealed a strangely of the received. There were joy, delight, fear and a policy of the recret playing upon the landsome features, that this the captain's mind was far from being at ease.

After a mediate delay, caused by the doubting fears of Jun, the decrease; r, he was admitted and excely questioned as the was admitted and whether there was any

. In the services of the correterion Captain Kit.

If no werl-as yet; different there may be some balls of the claim of the control of the claim of the control of the claim of the claim

After the little describen, the outlaws retired to the inner is ni and seen were soundly sleeping.

After assuring Linself of this fact, Captain Kit turned toward the door-keeper, whose head rested upon his knees, while a heavy, run bling snere, told how so not was his shander. Galling town, I him with a cat like step, he at the same time withdraw his left arm from its sile z. From the manner in which he moved it, the wound could not have been a very serious one, or else it had healed with marvelous celerity.

For a moment he stood over the somnolent sentirel, a shade of regret resting upon his pale features. Then a stern smile chased the shadow away, and he drew a long knife from his belt.

One arm shot quickly around beneath the Night Hawk's heel, and drew him forcibly back, thus garreting him. Then almost are the eyes could open, there came a brilliant this hirg as the steel shot down and sunk with a dull, thrilling thad to its very hilt in the unfortunate man's chest.

A single spasm distorted his features; one quiver agitated his form, and a suller, gargling mean rose to his threat. But the strong arm checked its utterance, and then with an involuntary shaller the slayer gently lowered his victim to the floor, and withdrew his knife.

Then be moved one of the rude lamps from its bracket, and opening the slide in the door, used as an observatory or loop-hole, he held the light where it could be seen from the grove without. He remained thus until there came a low rap upon the door.

Gently replacing the lamp, he opened the door and a limited the Hercule in form of Joshua Crane. After him came over a score of hardy settlers and hunters, who had been oddeded by the old scoat for this property as before neutices had

"They are in the re, beyon Step II, hilly and the extremely a company.

In them have a fair trad. There has been excelled by the state of the state Hadel by Josh Crear, the settlers gradly like I into the second room, and likeways the variet, each order being single beat by the or more of their free. Then at a find from the year man, they promed upon their prey, and, without an exception, had them securely bound, with cords provided beforehend, ore they could realize their peril.

Deep, bitter and vindictive were the curses showered upon the young man, by the betrayed Night-Hawks, as they beheld him standing free and unbound, smiling at their discomfiture. The smile deepened to a laugh as he replied:

"Spare your curses, my good friends, until you are sure who you are addressing. I am not your leader—never was, only in seeming. You were kind enough to assist my plans by making Captain Kit, as he calls himself, a prisoner, and putting him in the hole, yonder. I am Kirk Dalton, very much at your service," and the young man bowed mockingly.

The real captain Kit was now brought from the stone cell, and as the outlaws perceived how they had been duped by a bold and cunning enemy, their rage was frightful. But the harm was done and it was entirely too late for repinings.

The prisoners were secured in the vault, and then the settlers assumed their places, the better to receive the anticipated visit of Bogarth and his men. On the next day those worthies came in with a fine lot of stolen animals, and being surprised, were secured after a brief but desperate fight, in which several were killed upon either side.

A week afterward the lot were brought before Judge Lynch, and the more desperate sentenced to be bung, while the rest were terribly scourged and ordered to leave the country. An order they were only too glad to obey.

The capital sentence was carried out, and proved the means of stopping all further depredations in that section of the State.

A few words will suffice to connect all scattered threads.

The night that Captain Kit visited Pierson's ranche, alone when he met his mother—he was captured in the garden by Dalton and several others. Then Kirk assumed the out-law's part, and, posted by Carrie regarding the interior of the house, ae had taken the chief's post, the better to exterminate

Capiain Kit—or George Harkin—had only thought of his scheme since accepting command of the "station." He had noticed both Carrie and Kirk at their meeting near the grove, (chapter second) and, fired with a wild passion, resolved to win her for himself.

Spying around the ranche afterward, he had even heard the conversation between Judge Pierson and the vaquero, when the suit of the latter was scorned. And following Kirk, he also eavesdropped the vow uttered by Carrie, in the garden; afterward making adroit use of the knowledge, to sustain the belief that he was in reality the young herdsman.

In his first disappointment, Dalton had ridden assiduously to Millican, where he met a friend who delivered a message, telling him that the mystery of his birth would be solved, if he hastened at once to Galveston. He did so, and found Katherine Harkin, the mother of Captain Kit.

She told him a strange story, but substantiated by ample proofs, that he was the legitimate son of Casper Pierson, then residing in Alabama. He had been stolen in infancy by her, in revenge against the man who had first deceived and then deserted her.

Finally Kirk Dalton—or Casper Pierson—prevailed upon her to accompany him to the home of her he loved, confident that his uncle would no longer reject his suit. Fortunately, they escaped the notice of Captain Kit's spies, and the visit resulted as detailed.

Carrie, too, had played her part in the drama. It was absolutely essential to the success of their plans that some definite knowledge was had of the interior of the nest. Hence her note to, and meeting with, Captain Kit, acting as though she believed him her true lover.

Before the trial took place, Katherine Harkin managed to gain access to her son, and together they committed suicide. Better that than death by the rope, that otherwise awaited him. So died Caspar Pierson's half-brother.

Caspar, first received by his family, wedded the true-hearted Carrie, and lived upon the place where they first learned to love one another, and are now among the wealthiest stock-growers of Texas.

Josh Crane sunk into a sort of stupor, after the excitement was over, and died within a month from the brutal murder of his dearly beloved wife. United so long, he could not exist without her.

THE END.

the convert did between Jodge Figures and the mount

Popular American Tales.

100 Pages Crown Octavo, Complete. Fifteen Cents Each.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, PUBLISHERS, NEW YORK.

FIRST SERIES.

1-On the Plains.

2-The Border Spy.

3-Hermit of the Colorado Hills.

4-Free Trappers' Pass.

5-Bob Brant, Patriot and Spy. 6-1 he Guerrillas of the Osage.

7-Old Bill Woodworth. 8-The Oronoco Chief.

9-The Prisoner of the Mill.

10-The Secret Shot.

11-The Vicksburg Spy.

12-California Joe. 13-Crazy Dan.

14— the Craitor's Doom.

15-The Freebooters.

16-Old Hal Williams.

7-Kate Sharp.

18-The Frontier Scouts.

19-Sergeant Slasher,

20-Scouting Dave.

21-The Loyal Specter.

22-The Cave Secret.

23-Bella Burt.

24-The Wood Demon.

25-True Blue.

26-The Yankee Scout.

27-The Old Flag.

28-Old Peggy Boggs.

29-The Cotton Thief. 30-Old Guess Markham.

31-Old Rube, the Hunter.

32-The Scout's Vow.

33-Old Ben Manx.

34-The Regulators.

35-Tom Wiley.

36-Stung Serpent.

37-Border Ben.

38-Julia Bartram.

39-One-Eved Sim.

40-Scattled.

41 - The Silver Bullet.

42-Mike, the Guide.

43-Black Steed of the Prairies.

44-The Cutter's Cruise.

SECOND SERIES.

1-Loyal Heart.

2-The Trail-Hunter.

3-Pirates of the Prairies.

4—The Trapper's Daughter.

5-Pathaway.

6-Whitelaw.

7-White Wizard.

8-Hirl, the Hunchback.

9-The Red Warrior.

10-Quaker Saul, the Idiot Spy.

11-Mountain Max.

12-Thayendanegea.

13-The Mysterious Spy.

14-Prairie-Flower.

15-Redpath.

16-Tiger-Slayer.

17-Red Ralph, the Ranger

18-The Silent Rifleman.

19—The Flying Horseman.

20-The Gold Guide.

21—The Death Track.

22—The Blue Brotherhood.

23-Alapaha, the Squaw.

24-The Border Bandits.

25-Assowaum, the Avenger.

26-The Texan Spy. 27—The Red Trail.

28-The Sea Bandit.

29-Old Tiger, the Patriot.

30--The Bush Ranger.

31-The Outlaw Hunter.

32-Giant Jake.

33-The Robber Prince.

34-Long Armed Sampson.

35—The Smuggler.

36-The Giant Trailer.

37-The Doomed Guide.

38-The Ranger's Rifle.

39—War Axe.

40-Scotto, the Scout.

41-The Pirate Scud.

Popular Fifty Cent Books.

1-The Dead Letter. An American Romance. By Seeley Regester.

2-The Figure Eight: or, the Mystery of Meredith Place. By Sceley Regester.

3-Who Was He? A Story of Two Lives. By Mrs. M. V. Victor.

4 Our New States and Territories. By the late Albert D. Richardson.

The above books for sale by all Newsdealers; or sent, post-paid, to any address, on receipt of price.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, Publishers, 98 William St., N. Y.

Beadle's Standard Dime Publications.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, PUBLISHERS, NEW YORK.

Back volume 100 12mo. pages. Sent postage-paid, on receipt of price, ten cents each.

74. Croiser of Chesamerko 148. Ontward Bonnd.

Dime Novels.

1. Maineska.

2. The Privateer's Cruise.

4. Alice Wilde.

5. The Golden Beit.

S. Chip, the Cave Child.

7. The Resier of 76.

8. Seth Jones.

9. The Slave Sculpter.

10. The Backwoods Bride.

11. Prisoner La Vintresse. 12. Bill Bidden, Trapper.

13. Cedar Swamp.

14. Emerald Necklace.

15. The Frontier Augel.

16. Uncle Ezekiel, 17. Madge Wylde,

18. Nat Todd.

19. Massasolt's Dangleter.

20. Florida.

21. Sybil Chase.

22. The Maid of Esopus.

23. Winifred Winthrop.

24. The Trail Hunters.

25. The Peon Prince. 26. Brothren of the Coast.

27. Daughter of Liberty.

28, King Barnaby,

29. The Forest Spy. 30. Put. Pomfret's Ward,

31. The Double Hero.

32. Irona.

35. Mann Guinea.

34. Ruth Margorie.

Rout and West.

Eliflemen of the Miaml.

27. Godbold, the Spy.

28. The Wrong Man.

The Land Claim.

40. Unlouist's Daughter."

41. The Hunser's Cabin.

The King's Man. 43. The Atlena.

44. Agnes Falkland.

45. Eather.

46. Wreck of the Albion,

43. Tim Bumble's Charge.

48. Onnomoo, the Haron.

42. The Gold Hunters. 50: The Black Ship.

5). The Two Genrie.

St. Single Eye.

53. Hutes and Loves.

54. Mayrile.

55. Off and On. 56. Aluno's Plot

57. The Scont.

58. The Mad Hunter.

59. Keni, the Ranger.

60, Jo Davison' Client, 61. Laughing Even.

The Unknown

63. The Indian Princess.

64. Manyers of Molowa.

60. The Wrecker's Prize.

66. The Hunter's Vow.

67. Indian Jun.

68. The Brigantine.

69. Biack Hollow.

70. The Indian Queen.

71. The Loui Trail-

72. The Moose Hunter.

73. The Silver Bugie.

76. The Scout's Prize.

77. Quindara.

78. The Rival Scouts.

80. Eagle Eye.

Sl. The Two Hunters.

82. The Mestic Camer.

83. The Golden Harpoon.

84. The Seminole Chel.

85. The Fugitives 8si. Red Plume.

87. On the Deep.

88. Captain Molly.

89. Star Eyes.

90, Cast Away.

91 The Lost Cache.

99. The Twin Scouts.

The Croole Sisters,

94. The Mad Skipper. 95. Eph Peters.

96. Little Mosesuin,

97, The Doomed Hunter,

98. Ruth Harland.

99, Overboard.

100. Karaibo. 101. Maid of Wynning.

102. Hearts Forever. 103. Big Foot, the Guide.

104. Guilty or Not Guilty.

105, The Man in Green.

106. Sumple Phil.

107. The Peddler Spy.

105. The Lost Ship.

109. Kidnapped. 110. The Hidden Home

Di. The Shawness For.

112. The Falcon Rover.

113. Rattiepute.

114. Ned Starling.

115. The Sons of Liberty.

116. Port at Last. 117. The Mohogan Malden.

118. The Water Walf.

119. The Five Champions.

120. The Hunonback.

191, Vailed Benefactress.

122. Barden, the Ranger. 123. The Minning Britis.

124. Sumter's Scouts.

125, The Hunted Life, 126. Old Jupe.

197 Hald Eagle.

128 The Guick Miners. 129. Blackeven.

130. Braye Heart.

131. Wrecker's Paughter.

132. Old Honesty.

133. Yankee Epil.

134. Foul-weather Jack.

135. The Cherokee Chief.

136. The Indian-Pinnters. 151. The Traitor Spy.

138. Tim, the Scout.

139. The Border Foes,

140. Sheet-Anchor Tom.

141. The Helpiess Hand. 142. The Saganiors of Saco.

141. The Swamp Scout,

144. The Prairie Trappers. 145, The Mountaineer,

146. Border Besale.

147. Maid of the Mountain.

75. The Hunter's Image. 149. The Hunter's Pledge. 150. The Scalp-Hunters."

151. The Two Trails.

152. The Planter Pirate.

79. Schuylkill Rangers, ' 153. Mohawk Nat. 154. Rob Ruskin.

155. The White Squaw.

156. The Quakeress Spy. 157. The Indian Avenger.

los. The Blue Anchor. 169. Snowbird.

160. The Swamp Bifles.

161. The Lake Rangers, 162. The Border Rivain.

163. Job Dean, Tropper, 164, The Giant Chief.

165. The Unseen Hand. 166. Red Skin's Pledge. 167. Shadow Jack.

166. The Silent Hunter. 169. The White Caree. 170, The Border Avengera.

171, The Silent Slayer. 172. Degrard, the Spy.

173, The Red Coyote-174. Queen of the Woods.

175. The Prairie Ridge. 176. The Trader Spy. 177. The Pule-face Squaw.

178. The Prairie Bride. 179; The White Valeure,

180. Giant Pote, Patriot. 181. Old Kyle, the Trailer.

182 Jahez Hawk 183. The Phantom Ship.

184. The Rud Rider, 185. The Danotali Scourge. 186. The Red Scalper.

187, The Outlaws' Plot. The Black Rover-

The Yellow Chief. 189. 190. Phantom Horseman,

191. Best Shayer. 199. The Specter Skipper.

193. The Swamp Ridges. 194. Gray lock, the isulde,

195, The First Trull. 196, Eagle Plume. 195. Shawme Scont-

198. Burt Bunker. 199, Red Outliew.

200. Prairie Pathfinder. 201. White Serpent.

202. Phantom Foed 203. Masked Gulde. 204. Metamora.

200, The Gray Scalp. 206, Buckskin Hill.

197. The Bushalo-Trapper. 208, The Ocean Outlaw, mm. Scarred Eagle. 210. Redlaw, Hall-Bread.

SIL The Quadroon Spy. 212. Silverspor.

21% Squatter Dick. 214. The Forest Mounter. 215. The White Hermit.

217. Mountain Gid, 21% Indian Spy,

216, Red Belt,

219, The Scioto Scouts, 290. Nick Dovle.

221. The Blue Clipper. " Novels marked with a star are double numbers, 200 pages. Price 20 coun22% King of the Mountain 224. The Mohave Captive.

225, Black Arrow.

202, The Mad Ranger.

226. Mustang-Hunters. 227. The Perest Princess.

228. The Mute Chief. 229. The White Graziy. 230. The Partison Spy.

Edl. The Texas Traller. 232. The Prairie Queen.

233. The Privateor's Bride. 2 4. The Forest Specter.

225. The Black Wisard. 236. The Ice Flend. 237. The Plymouth Secut

250. Night-Hawk Kit. Dime School Series.

I. American Speaker. 2. National Speaker.

3. Patractic Speaker. 4. Condo-Spraker.

5. Elocutionist. 6. Harmorous Speaker.

7. Standard Speaker. 8. Stomy Specker.

2. Juvenille Speaker. 10. Spread-Engle Speaker. 11. Dime Delaper. 12. Exhibition Speaker.

Madewilles, School Melodist.

Dime Hand-Books

I. Letter-Writer. 2. Book of Etionella.

Book of Verses. 4. Book of Dronnes.

5. Portune Valley, 6. Ladies Latter Writer. 2. Lovers' Contact.

I. Cook Back,

8. Reddinson Crosps. 9. Bull-room Companien. BOOKS OF PERS, Non. 3 to 3.

Bruse-Publ Edigram for 1873. Book of Croquet.

Dline Game-Books.

Ches Instencior. Dime Family Series.

2. Recips Book. 3. Housewile's Marinal. 4. Family Physician.

b. Dronningking, Millinery,

Dime Song Books. Stonge Howland Nove I to and Dince Blographics.

2. Panial Brook. Z KILLAINE. 4. Anthony Watter.

L. David Crockett. fig. Windreld Scott.

t General adults

7. Pontine. S. John C. Promont.

9. John Paul James. 10. Marquin de Ladayette.

Terransoli-12. George B. Morlinghan. 13. Parson Brownson.

14. Abraimon Essecia. 15. Ulyane S. Grant.

For sale by all Newsdealers , or sent, rost-pain, to may address, on receipt of price, the current sales.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, Publishers, 98 William St., N. Y.